In Tasmania is to be found a national pastime that is special and particular to that state alone—the sport of wood chopping. At Hobart and Launceston they have their turf meetings, their cricket, football, golf, cycling, and so forth, but to a wood-chopping contest people will flock from far and near—men, women and children—and watch the ax wielders hewing away at huge blocks of timber as if life and reputation depended upon the issue. Thud, thud, thud go the axes, and the splinters fly in all directions, the judges calmly sitting near taking note of the strokes, the spectators cheering the competitors from time to time as frantically as if they were race horses. To be a wood-chopping champion means something to a man in Tasmania.

Inconsiderate.

"That conductor isn't very considerate of people's feelings." "No, he'd tell a man with a wooden leg to 'step lively.'"

A LITTLE COLD.

He caught a little cold—
That was all.
So the neighbors sadly said,
As they gathered round his bed,
When they heard that he was dead.

He caught a little cold—
That was all. (Puck.)

Neglect of a cough or cold often leads to serious trouble. To break up a cold in twenty-four hours and cure any cough that is curable mix two ounces of Glycerine, a half-ounce of Virgin Oil of Pine compound pure and eight ounces of pure Whisky. Take a teaspoonful every four hours. You can buy these at any good drug store and easily mix them in a large bottle.

INSTRUCTION IN THE SCHOOLS

Children Being Taught the Nature and Methods of Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Definite instruction concerning the nature and methods of prevention of tuberculosis is being given to less than six per cent. of the public school children of the United States, according to a bulletin of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. Recent investigation has shown that in only nine cities, Washington, Dallas, Tex., Richmond, Va., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Detroit, Mich., Malden, Mass., Salem, Mass., Saginaw, Mich., and Knoxville, Tenn., are special text books being used or lectures being given about tuberculosis. In three states and one territory, Michigan, Massachusetts, North Carolina and Porto Rico, laws have been passed requiring that instruction about the nature and methods of prevention of tuberculosis be given in all public schools. In Tennessee the state department of education has requested that such instruction be given and has issued circulars for this purpose. In New Jersey and West Virginia wall cards giving instruction are hung in every schoolroom and the attention of all children is called to them.

Opera the Great Leveler.

At one of the Wagner operas a few days ago a woman nudged her friend and said: "Who's that distinguished man bowing to you over there?" Her friend looked in the direction designated and smiled in a return greeting. "That's my butcher," she said. "I see him here quite often. When I go marketing in the morning we always discuss the opera. He's a German, you know, and really knows a lot about other things besides cutting meat."—New York Sun.

The newspaper boys seem to be pretty solidly behind Sam Gordon of Browns Valley for lieutenant governor.

Doubtless President Taft feels sure that if the editors were in Washington where they could hear Aldrich and Hale and Penrose and Cannon pour every day the attitude of the newspapers would be softened.

Reapportionment promises to be a big question in Northern Minnesota in the forthcoming campaign. There is so much of injustice in the present apportionment that the legislature ought to right the wrong without a fight.

Al H. Jester of Bemidji has filed for the Republican nomination for state senator. This makes two entries for Beltrami county, and it is understood that Senator Hanson will file again, also that a Mahnomen county man will get in the race.

The eulogy of Governor Johnson delivered before the state editorial association at Minneapolis last week by Judge C. W. Stanton of Bemidji was not only a remarkable contribution to the literature of the state, but it was a deserved tribute to the man who was highest in the affections of the people of the state. Judge Stanton is entitled the generous compliments his address received.

Walter Wellman writes that Cannon and his lieutenants are planning on making Tawney speaker in case Cannon steps aside, which Wellman thinks Uncle Joe will do. The country expects just some such effort as this, but it will not succeed. Cannon not only will not be speaker of the next house, but he will not have anything to do with choosing the speaker. The power of Uncle Joe will be run out by that time.

Minnesota farmers received last year nearly $25,000,000 for milk sold to the creameries of this state according to the estimate made by Dairy and Food Commissioner Andrew French from incomplete returns received by his office. Mr. French believes that the total amount paid the patrons in the state increased 25 per cent. About one-half of this increase is due to the new creameries that were established in the state during the year. Minnesota is evidently holding its own as the "bread and butter state."

Daniel W. Meeker, superintendent of this, the ninth enumeration of the census district, which comprises the ninth congressional district, has received notification that there will be no less than 270 districts in thirteen counties of which he has supervision. It will require quick and hard work to take the census. The work must be done between April 1 and May 1 for just 30 days are allowed by the government for the task. Those who have taken the examination will be notified if their services are needed about the first of April, so they can make preparations for doing the work.

A New York judge gave his son $1000, telling him to go to college and graduate. The son returned at the end of his freshman year without a dollar and with several ugly habits. At the close of the vacation the judge told his son that he had done all he could for him. If he had wasted the money that was to have taken him through college, he might as well leave home and make his way in the world. It was a rude awakening for the young man, but he knew that his father was right. And so strong was the influence of his upright father that he did leave home to go to work in downright earnest. He went back to college, made his way through, graduated at the head of his class, studied law, became governor of the State of New York, entered the cabinet of the president of the United States, and made a name for himself that the country will not willingly let die. That man was William H. Seward.

MANAGING CONGRESS.

President Taft has ordered his administration on the theory that it is better to persuade congress to grant progressive legislation than to use the possibilities of his office to procure it. This is a kindly impulse, of course, says the Winona Independent, but it is a doubtful policy with such potential leaders as Aldrich and Cannon to be reckoned with. One of the particulars in which Mr. Roosevelt was an "exception to the rule" was that he knew when it was useless to employ persuasion and necessary to appeal to the people for co-operative pressure.

Mr. Taft is getting impatient, it is said, over the slowness of congress with certain measures urged by him in keeping with the party platform and his own progressive policies. If patience is a virtue, the President will have large opportunity to display virtuous fortitude before he sees that program carried through as he made it.

Mr. Roosevelt also was particular in another respect. He knew when congress had kept a party pledge and when it hadn't, and he never made apologies for a betrayal of the people.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

St. Cloud Journal-Press: The conservation convention at Bemidji was a great success. Many able men from the northern part of the state participated and it was resolved that the representatives and senators from the north were to block all legislation until the state had been given a reapportionment that should do justice to the whole state. It has been several years since the state has been legislatively reapportioned and the northern section has increased greatly in population during these years and the present basis of representation is neither fair nor satisfactory. Here's to the insurgents from the north!

Brainerd Dispatch: There is no question about Northern Minnesota wanting reapportionment—it not only wants it, but demands its rights.

Hibbing Tribune: The delegates who gathered at Bemidji were very much in earnest indeed. Their manifest intention was to seek out those things upon which the people of the thirty counties represented might agree without dispute and then to put the shoulder of a unified Northern Minnesota to the accomplishment of these things.

The Tribune predicts that out of the Bemidji conference will grow a unity that will make Northern Minnesota irresistable and that will bring to a compartively early fruition many things which Northern Minnesota has thus far attempted to cultivate with but partial and indifferent success.

Stillwater Gazette: Many people agree with each other that our banking system is wretched, the worst ever, but if you look them up closely you will find that they couldn't get a cent out of a bank, unless they used a jimmy and dynamite. This class doesn't believe in depositing: they are for excavating.

Sauk Rapids Sentinel-Free Press: From fourteen southern Minnesota counties thirty-four representitives go to the state legislature. These counties cast 53,828 votes, an average of 1,584 votes for each representative. From thirteen northern Minnesota counties come nine members representing a voting population of 30,580, or one to each 3,390. Reapportionment is the issue with northern Minnesota people, and it will be their issue until the arrangement that leaves 50 per cent of them without representation is rectified. Here's to their success.

St. Paul Pioneer Press: It is reported that Rich of St. Paul may become revenue collector. Turn about is fair play: the revenue collectors of some other cities have become rich.

St. Cloud Journal-Press: We are in favor of good roads—but we doubt if calling an extra session of the legislature would not be too high a price even for the most perfect of public thoroughfares.

Sioux City Journal: It is said Mr. Cannon is very fond of automobile riding. The time was when the bicycle was an attraction with him, and when he reached such proficiency that he could spit without falling off he was delighted.

Pointed Paragraphs.

S.S.S. PURELY VEGETABLE

It is a generally recognized fact that medicines taken from the botanical kingdom are better adapted to the delicate human system, and safer in every way, than those composed of strong mineral mixtures.

In the early settlement of this land, our forefathers were obliged to procure their medicines from Nature's great laboratories of forest and field. They searched out and compounded the different vegetable materials into teas, concoctions and medicines. That these pioneers found the most potent and valuable of the roots, herbs and barks placed at their disposal, is abundantly proven by the fact that the great majority of them were blessed with rugged health. They cured their diseases and were enabled to do the great preliminary work of civilization because the remedies they used were Nature's remedies, and specially adapted to the needs of humanity.

Among the very best of these vegetable preparations is S. S. S., a medicine made entirely of roots, herbs and barks in such combination as to make it the greatest of all blood purifiers and the finest of all tonics. S. S. S. does not contain the least particle of mineral in any form, and is absolutely a safe medicine for any one to use.

While purifying the blood this great vegetable remedy builds up and strengthens every portion of the system. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, Scrofula, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, hereditary taints, and all other diseases and disorders caused by impure or polluted blood.

As a tonic S. S. S. is unequalled. It invigorates every portion of the system, and the healthy blood it creates largely assists in overcoming any derangement of the digestive system. If you are suffering from any blood trouble, or need a tonic to build up your constitution, you could not do better than to take S. S. S., a medicine that is in no degree harmful. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

CHEMIST FOUND S.S.S. FREE FROM MINERALS.
A few years ago I was taken with Inflammatory Rheumatism. Upon the advice of a friend I decided to try S.S.S. Before allowing me to take it, however, my guardian, who was a chemist, analyzed the remedy, and pronounced it free from potash or mercury. I continued the remedy, and in two months I was cured completely. The cure was permanent, for I have never since had a touch of Rheumatism, though many times exposed to damp and cold weather.

The Way It Helps.

When Sir Andrew Clark, Mr. Gladstone's physician, recommended a patient to drink wine the latter expressed some surprise, saying he thought Sir Andrew was a temperance doctor, to which Sir Andrew Clark replied:

"Oh, wine does sometimes help you to get through work. For instance, I have often twenty letters to answer after dinner, and a pint of champagne is a great help."

"Indeed," said the patient, "does a pint of champagne really help you to answer the twenty letters?"

"No, no!" said Sir Andrew. "But when I've had a pint of champagne I don't care a rap whether I answer them or not!"

Our information as to details is rather meagre as everybody who had any knowlege of the affair refused to be pumped: in fact we did not even see the bride as when Mr. Iverson returned the first of the week Mrs. Iverson did not accompany him.

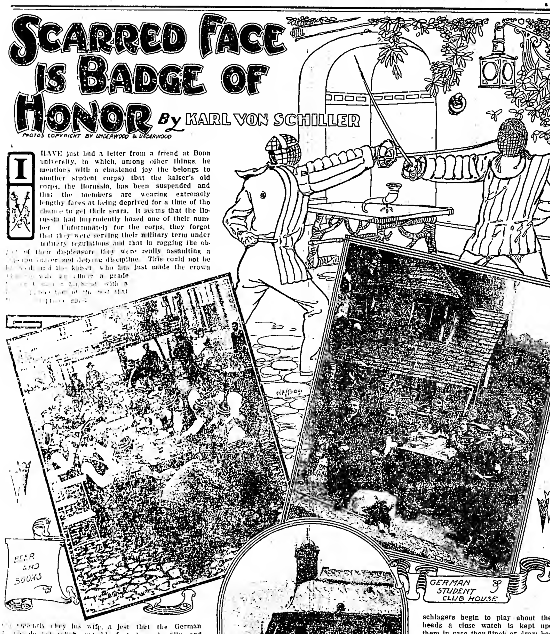
SCARRED FACE IS BADGE OF HONOR

By KARL VON SCHILLER

PHOTOS COPYRIGHT BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD



GERMAN STUDENT CLUB HOUSE

OLD UNIVERSITY BUILDINGS, HEIDELBERG

I HAVE just had a letter from a friend at Bonn university, in which, among other things, he mentions with a chastened joy (he belongs to another student corps) that the kaiser's old corps, the Borussia, has been suspended and that the members are wearing extremely lengthy faces at being deprived for a time of the chance to get their scars. It seems that the Borussia had imprudently hazed one of their number. Unfortunately for the corps, they forgot that they were serving their military term under military regulations and that in ragging the object of their displeasure they were really assaulting a superior officer and defying discipline. This could not be [illegible] and the kaiser, who has just made the crown [illegible] an officer a grade [illegible] with a [illegible] of the fact that [illegible] obey his wife, a jest that the German [illegible] did not relish—put his foot down heavily, and [illegible] will be no dueling in this corps for some time.

The kaiser, who by reason of his noble blood was not [illegible] to take part in the duels of his corps, the [illegible] of Bonn university, nevertheless is stated on [illegible] to have doffed his dignity and under a [illegible] of secrecy from his fellow students to have [illegible] his part. He has never lost his sympathy with the aim and object of this traditional custom, which to the [illegible] seems a survival of the brutal days of [illegible] times, but which in reality has a specific end. What football is to the American student, rugby and [illegible] to the English, so is the duel to the German—a test of endurance and a lesson in keeping an equable temper and restraint under provocation. The kaiser, with an eye to the championship of personal and national honor, has expressed an opinion that this custom should [illegible] and that there was nothing equal to it for the [illegible] or hardening of the leaders, military, commercial and professional, of the empire.

I never enter a car and hang by a strap without looking at the back of the man in front of me and speculating as to his profession or his nationality. The clothes [illegible] very little—they are American and well fitting, but the instant their owner turns his face you exclaim [illegible], with a sense of mental satisfaction, at having found something definite—German. There is no mistaking the telltale scar that runs from eye [illegible] or decorates his chin with a puckered [illegible].

Not all Germans wear honorable scars, however. The badge is the prerogative of the student of Bonn, Heidelberg, Leipsic, Freiburg or the other German universities and as they average [illegible] students each, the class is limited.

The kaiser's edict will not prevent dueling at Bonn however. There are still other corps, each with its distinctive name, cap, rules and regulations and clearly defined etiquette, chiefly of the [illegible] classes. Each university has its fraternities with a membership of a limited number, seldom exceeding 20 or 25; and to join one of the [illegible] ones is a much sought honor. The object of these clubs is to all appearance of a convivial nature, as beer and wine drinking enter largely into their ceremonial observances, but they are really to promote camaraderie and to enable the too often lonely student to form friendships which will endure through life and be of [illegible] service to them. Besides the specific corps there are other bodies composed of the middle class students, such as the landsmannschaft, which was the earliest order of student fraternities.

The duel may have its origin in any quarrel or difference of opinion, but usually has not. It is a thing of etiquette and is used to prove a student. The more duels one fights the bigger swagger one may display, and a scar is a sign that one has come out of the ordeal with honor and is a silent and speaking testimony to the bearer's courage. The larger the strips of sticking plaster which hold a cheek together or a sliced nose in position the higher one goes in the affection of the fräuleins, and what is the world without "Wein, weib und Gesang?"

When a duel is arranged a pretext having been contrived by the simple expedient of a member of the corps clumsily treading on the tail of a dog owned by a member of another corps, or by some such obvious excuse, the combatants are swathed with bandages on the body and right arm, the head and eyes and throat are protected and the only visible spot left are the cheeks, chin and nose.

The swords are razor-edged at the point and, unlike the French dueling sword, which is used [illegible] fashion, they are meant simply to make a downward nick, which serves to form the scar, without much further damage than a copious stream of blood and a sore face for a bit. Those are schlagers and are the scar formers. On the other hand to wipe out an insult the "sine-sine" duel is resorted to. That means that the bodies are left "without" almost any protection and the swords are sabres, which have no limitation of use. When the couple face each other and the schlagers begin to play about their heads a close watch is kept upon them in case they flinch or draw back their heads. If they do they disgrace their corps. Finally one sword lands and a sprinkle of blood appears. If it is not likely to cause a severe scar the fight continues until at last a cunning snick does the trick. The surgeon who is at hand is allowed to try his prentice hand—he is often a first year "med"—and the wound is bound up or sewn. Then an adjournment is made and the evening is spent with beer and song. The wounded one receives his congratulations and stalks about in an ecstacy of joy. If he thinks his scar is not going to be beautiful enough he may keep the wound open for days and prevent its rapid healing.

But there are other duels besides those of the sword. There is the honorable drinking trial, where he who succeeds longest in delaying his descent to below the table is crowned. As it is treason to refuse to drink a toast and as there are toasts all night, the president has a busy time supervising the proper filling of each glass. It is quite legitimate to make room for more beer. When the smoke is thickest and the songs have died to a hoarse babble it is time to make the count.

Peace has her victories, and no doubt to the students of the Fatherland this is a laudable species of peaceful victory.

BERLIN'S "NEW BREW"

WITHIN 20 minutes of Berlin is the little suburb of Hallensee. Delightfully picturesque, it is a strong rival of Potsdam as a favorite haunt for tourists and pleasure seekers. It is best known throughout all Germany for its famous Terraces of Hallensee, the nearest thing Germany has to a dreamland or the midway plaisance of a world's fair, the Berlin correspondence of the New York Times says. The scale of the terrassen, as it is called, is very different from that of a place like Dreamland or Luna park, for instead of being a row of fantastic buildings or variety shows, it is simply a restaurant of vast proportions situated upon a lake, yet at certain seasons of the year it is essentially the same sort of a place, merely a resort for pleasure seekers.

But in the early spring it is the seat for Berlin of the famous bock beer fests, a truly German institution, a tradition, in fact, and as far removed from the atmosphere of a Coney Island as the sun is from the earth. There is nothing artificial then, no American tourists to give a jarring note to the party. It is a time when the German is not afraid to be seen at play and proudly permits his inherent passion for Bavarian beer to come to the surface, like the froth on the beverage itself.

As a restaurant the "Terraces" is unique, not only from its size and capacity, accommodating as it does some 14,000, but also from its fantastic yet artistic architecture. It is an interesting example of what a creative American mind, the architect being A. F. Lange, absorbing the Teutonic atmosphere and traditions, can produce. Upon looking at the photographs of the "Terraces" one would think they were taken in Assyria, Egypt or some other oriental country, for, indeed, the Assyrian theme runs throughout the entire architecture.

In the season of the bock beer fests, the season when the Bavarian breweries announce the brewing of their new beer, an announcement which thrills the heart of every German and which is celebrated in every city of the empire, the Berliners throng the "Terraces" every night during the celebration. Berliners by no means monopolize it, but patrons and enthusiasts from all the cities of northern Germany flock about its standard like crowds of holiday seekers in the Paris or London season.

Away with the proverbial waiter! Girls and young women are brought up from Munich and other Bavarian cities especially for the occasion. Dressed in the Bavarian peasant costume, consisting of a short bodice, full skirts flowing from padded hips, small, gay colored caps poked coquettishly on one side the head and a white blouse with very loose sleeves, they give an added touch to the gay and hilarious scenes of this famous celebration. Three or four Tyrolean or Bavarian peasant bands afford the music, pleasing at first, but soon becoming a pandemonium of sounds as the evening's supply of "new beer" becomes diminished. In fact, the bands are one of the chief attractions and without them the fest would be of little amusement. Some have only zithers, while others have the full list of brass instruments, but each has at least one phenomenally stout man with an equally phenomenal capacity for the new beer, whose duty it is to harass the bass drum with more physical than musical strength.

Such efforts are the signal for uproarious shouts and jibes. In all there is the best of good nature and fellowship, nothing in the least obscene is ever suggested or tolerated.

The spread of Americanism in Europe is well evidenced there at Hallensee, where an American architect has built the temple to so sacred a fest as the celebration of the brewing of the new beer. Surely no one will deny that Americanism, an ism more to be feared than Lutherism and the reformation, has penetrated the innermost depths of traditional Europe.

LITTLE HOPE FOR FATHER

Old Gentleman Likely to Continue Being Wedded to His Idols, and Paying the Bills.

A Kansas man complains that since his daughter has taken music lessons, which he paid for, she insists upon playing only classical stuff. When he comes home tired and asks for a little tune, he gets nothing but musical gymnastics. The whole feminine part of the community, he thinks, is in a conspiracy to uplift him, and he doesn't want to be uplifted.

It is just like father to make a complaint like that. Father never did take kindly to culture. He sits disconsolate in the draughty kitchen, while daughter's Browning circle meets in the front room. It is father's idea entirely that he put on an uncomfortable collar in the evening, and hear a missionary lecture on Borneo. Father's taste of music stops short at Suwanee River, and he knows almost nothing about the minor poets and the pre-Raphaelites. His art ideas are derived from the illustrated Sunday supplement; he will not sit in a Louis XVI. chair, and he cares not a whit for the poetry of the ancient Chaldeans. Shirt sleeves and carpet slippers are his conception of correct evening dress for gentlemen.

There is little hope that anything permanent can ever be done for father. When the millennium comes, he will still be found reading the newspapers, smoking up the window curtains, impeding progress—and paying the rent.—Success Magazine.

An aspiration is a joy forever, a possession as solid as a landed estate, a fortune which you can never exhaust and which gives you year by year a revenue of pleasurable activity. To have many of these is to be spiritually rich.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

THOMPSON DEAD

WELL KNOWN FARGOAN SUDDENLY STRICKEN—NEURALGIA OF HEART KILLS.

MASONIC GRAND SEC'Y

Deceased Was City Librarian—Had Been Active in Public Affairs and Served in State Legislature.

Fargo.—No greater shock was ever experienced by Fargo citizens than that caused by the announcement of the sudden death of Frank J. Thompson at his home in this city, the cause of his death being angina pectoris or neuralgia of the heart.

Mr. Thompson has long been identified with almost every enterprise connected with the upbuilding of Fargo, having come to this city with his father in 1878. He was born in Rockford, Ill., Aug. 23, 1854 and was of Revolutionary stock. His education was obtained in the schools of Marshall and Jackson, Mich. and in the former city he learned the machinist trade, serving five years apprenticeship. He never followed this occupation. For two years he was engaged in teaching music and in 1876 he began to study law in Jackson, Mich, with Highbee & Gibson, well known attorneys of that state. Soon after being admitted to the bar he came to North Dakota and located in Fargo. In 1881 he formed a partnership with Henry Krogh, but this was dissolved in 1892. Since this date he has been mainly engaged in work in connection with the Masonic bodies, being grand secretary of the Grand Lodge, Grand chapter, Grand Commandery and local secretary of the Blue lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Shrine, nearly all this period. He was also for several years the secretary of the Scottish Rite bodies. He has held nearly every Masonic office, including Grand Master and for six years was Potentate of El Zagale temple. He was also a thirty-third degree Honorarium and one of his boasts was that he had taken every Masonic degree which he had received here in Fargo.

The deceased was long connected with the school board of this city and was a member of the legislature in 1889, being the chairman of the committee on judiciary. He also held the position of assistant attorney general under Hon. C. A. M. Spencer. He has been in charge of the Carnegie library at the temple, and originated a new system of cataloguing books which has attracted universal attention.

Mr. Thompson was a student and made many deep investigations. He took up the study of osteopathy and graduated also as a full fledged physician and surgeon. He delved into the occult and the more mysterious the subject was the more interesting it became to him, and it is rare to find a more thoroughly posted man on so many topics than the deceased was.

In addition to his Masonic affiliations he belonged to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the United Commercial Travelers.

Mr. Thompson always took an active part in public affairs and was an enthusiastic American, and with his liberal views, and energy has done much to develop all that was best in the growth of Fargo.

The deceased was married at Minneapolis, Minn., in 1882, to Miss Elmandiae Bissonette, who survives him, together with two children, Miss Jardine and Jack Dakotah; he also leaves his mother and a brother, residing at Dickinson, all of whom have the most heartfelt sympathy of a large circle of friends.

New Rockford Will Rebuild.

New Rockford.—The fire loss will not reach as large figures as at first reported this morning, and conservative estimates made by the owners and insurance men now place the loss in the neighborhood of $100,000, a small portion of which is covered by insurance.

It is believed today that the fire originated from a stove either in the Hudson confectionery store or Dunham's jewelry store, and a peculiar incident in connection with the fire lies in the fact that flames were discovered in both buildings at the same time. The fire which partly destroyed the old Davies livery barn is believed to have been of incendiary origin, as the building was a fire trap and an undesirable property in the center of the city.

The upper stories in 10 of the burned buildings were occupied and several cases of sickness are reported as due to the exposure of the people, many of whom escaped clad only in their night clothing. Goods from the various buildings were emptied into the street and much property was lost through the work of thieves. The amount of gods stolen will total several hundreds of dollars, according to the merchants.

Second Class Mail Burned.

Fargo.—Eight sacks of second class mail were badly damaged and soiled in a fire which broke out in mail car No. 113 used on the southwestern branch of the Northern Pacific yesterday morning while standing on a siding near the Fourth street crossing.

To Divide Williams County.

Ambrose.—At a meeting that has been called for Ambrose on March 18, at which there will be representatives in attendance from every township and city in the northern part of Williams county, the question of county division will be discussed. It is proposed to divide Williams county into two counties, forming a new one out of the northern half. The railroad facilities are such that go to the county seat of Williams county necessitates a long overland trip, and this fact is responsible for the present agitation. A committee is in charge of the plans that are being worked out.

Denver, Feb. 25.—Through the silent labors of the Franciscan friers of St. Elizabeth's church, carried on ever since he was assassinated at the altar two years ago, Fathers Leo's name will be perpetuated by a sanitorium for the treatment of tuberculosis. A site of fiften acres has been purchased.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA

"No tongue can tell how I suffered for five years with itching and bleeding eczema, until I was cured by the Cuticura Remedies, and I am so grateful I want the world to know, for what helped me will help others. My body and face were covered with sores. One day it would seem to be better, and then break out again with the most terrible pain and itching. I have been sick several times, but never in my life did I experience such awful suffering as with this eczema. I had made up my mind that death was near at hand, and I longed for that time when I would be at rest. I had tried many different doctors and medicines without success, and my mother brought me the Cuticura Remedies, insisting that I try them. I began to feel better after the first bath with Cuticura Soap, and one application of Cuticura Ointment.

"I continued with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, and have taken four bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, and consider myself well. This was nine years ago and I have had no return of the trouble since. Any person having any doubt about this wonderful cure by the Cuticura Remedies can write to my address. Mrs. Altie Etson, 93 Inn Road, Battle Creek, Mich., Oct. 16, 1909."

A GOOD CHANGE

A Change of Food Works Wonders.

The wrong food and drink causes a [illegible] of trouble in this world. To change the food is the first duty of every person that is ill, particularly [illegible] stomach and nervous troubles. As an illustration: A lady in Mo. has, with her husband, been brought around to health again by leaving off coffee and some articles of food that did not agree with them. They began using Postum and Grape-Nuts food. She says:

"For a number of years I suffered with stomach and bowel trouble which kept getting worse until I was very ill most of the time. About four years ago I left off coffee and began using Postum. My stomach and bowels improved right along, but I was reduced in flesh and so nervous that the least thing would overcome me.

"Then I changed my food and began using Grape-Nuts in addition to Postum. I lived on these two principally for about four months. Day by day I gained in flesh and strength until now the nervous trouble has entirely disappeared and I feel that I owe my life and health to Postum and Grape-Nuts.

"Husband is 75 years old and he was troubled for a long time with occasional cramps and slept badly. Finally I prevailed upon him to leave off coffee and take Postum. He had stood out for a long time, but after he tried Postum for a few days he found that he could sleep and that his cramps disappeared. He was satisfied and has never gone back to coffee.

"I have a brother in California who has been using Postum for several years, his whole family use it also because they have had such good results from it."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

GATHERED SMILES

RATHER OILY.

The train stopped at the little Georgia town and the tourist sauntered out to the observation platform.

"Rather likely pickaninny you have there, uncle," remarked the traveler, good humoredly. "Named George Washington?"

"Might seem a little queeh to you', sah, but Massa Rockyfellar was down heah some time ago en gib me a quatah foh totin' his grip. Ah named de pickaninny in his honah, sah."

"But Rockefeller's first name is John."

"Yeas, sah, but yo' see dis chile's full name am Petroleum, en we calls him Petro foh shoht."

Missed One.

"William," said Mrs. Peckem, sternly, "did you ever stop to think that some one might steal me when you are away?"

"Well," responded the poor henpecked husband, with a far-away look, "I was a little alarmed when a horse thief was prowling through these parts last week."

Mrs. Peckem stiffened up haughtily.

"A horse thief, eh?"

"Yes; I heard that he carried off two or three nags from this section."

And then Peckem made a beeline for the car.

His Just Deserts.

"That seems to be a hot pot over there," said a recent arrival in Hades, indicating a cauldron which was throwing out terrific heat waves.

"You bet your life that's a hot pot!" said an imp who spoke slang fluently. "In fact, that's one of the hottest pots in Hades."

"May I ask who is the occupant?"

"You may. The occupant is an editor who made a practice all his life of clipping stuff from other newspapers and publishing it in his own paper without credit."

THE AUDIENCE KNEW.

Hamfatter.—His acting as the hero was so realistic that the audience interfered when the mob tried to hang him in the second act.

The Leading Lady.—Yes?

Hamfatter.—Yes, they said it was too good for him.

Dead Slow.

Along the polar contest pokes,
And duller gets,
Producing nothing new in jokes
Or epithets.

Not Incompatible.

"I wonder that the reformers have not attacked the tables in arithmetic which are taught the children in schools."

"Why should they attack such things as those?"

"On the ground of morality. Those tables make drams and scruples go together."

Brute.

Cynic—She knows his footsteps a mile off in the midst of a hundred others, sees him coming from the corner of her eye, pats her hair and smooths her dress, and jumps a foot with surprise when he ascends the piazza steps.

Clinic—Who?

Cynic—All of 'em!"—Life.

Water All Around.

Church—You know that Manhattan is an island?

Gotham—Sure thing.

"Do you know how it is bounded—by what waters?"

"Sure; North river, East river, Harlem river and Wall street!"—Yonkers Statesman.

A Fair Feast.

"How did that pretty young missionary lady get on with the cannibal tribe she went out to convert? Did they take to her?"

"Did they? Literally took her right in their midst. They said as soon as they saw her she was sweet enough to eat."

Might Have Been Worse.

"It must have been awfully exasperating to have to walk back that day you went aviating with Mr. Hyflier."

"I didn't consider it so. There was the possibility of having to come back in an ambulance, you know."

'Twasn't There.

"Mrs. Flipper was woefully disappointed yesterday."

"What happened to Mrs. Flipper?"

"Mr. Flipper brought home a copy of the Congressional Record and Mrs. Flipper spent half an hour looking for the woman's department."

Swift Thinker.

Harker—You seem in a deep study. A penny for your thoughts, old man.

Bluffwood—Oh, I'm a rapid thinker and have 500 thoughts at once. Pass me over a five spot.

LAY OF THE 30-CENT EGG CLUB.

"Cackle! Cackle! Cackle!"
Cried the hen,
"I have laid a handsome egg,
And to state I humbly beg:
Faithful to my job I work
And I do not even shirk
Now and then.
Cackle! Cackle! Cackle!"
Cried the hen.

"Cackle! Cackle! Cackle!"
Cried the man,
"I have laid a pretty plot
As for eggs, I'll eat them not Till a dozen in expense
Comes to only thirty cents.
That's my plan.
Cackle! Cackle! Cackle!"
Cried the man.

"Cackle! Cackle! Cackle!"
Cried the trust
"I will lay rebellion's ghost.
What avails a fasting host?
I have storage houses cold
That a lot of eggs will hold
Ere they bust.
Cackle! Cackle! Cackle!"
Cried the trust.

—McLaughlin Wilson, in New York Sun.

CRUEL.

Mr. Watson.—Ah! Lobelia, I love you. My heart is on fire—

Lobelia. Then I'll put it out. I keep this bottle handy for just such emergencies.

Merely a Starter.

With young folks the mistletoe
Plays havoc. Can you doubt it?
For kissing, started by its aid,
Soon gets along without it.

The Cost of the Service.

"What do you pay your chef?" I asked the great trust magnate, whose steamers plow every sea, whose railroads span every state, whose tenements pay him 35 per cent. in every city.

"Five thousand dollars," he said, briefly.

"But one of the yellow journals," I persisted, "states that your chef costs you twenty-five thousand."

"Well, I fear the statement is not incorrect," he sighed; "though I pay the chef the amount I named, he costs me fully twenty-five thousand, for I pay a salary of twenty thousand to my physician."

His Unfortunate Modesty.

Seymour—I thought McBlusher got a job with a brass band?

Ashley—He did; but the job lasted only one day.

Seymour—What was the trouble?

Ashley—McBlusher was so modest that he had to have an assistant and the bandmaster refused to pay for the services of the two.

Seymour—You speak in riddles; I don't see what McBlusher's modesty had to do with his hiring an assistant.

Ashley—You don't? It had everything to do with it; McBlusher was too modest to blow his own horn.

Mum's the Word.

Stubb—Now, my wife and your wife are great friends. For a birthday present my wife is going to give your wife a parrot. Keep it mum, old man.

Penn (grimly)—You bet your sweet life I'll keep it mum. I'll chop off its head the first night of its arrival.

HOW?

Ethel.—I have a habit, but I've never ridden.

Maud.—How could you acquire the habit without ever being in a saddle?

The Optimist.

He built his airy castle high,
Just kept right on a-piling
Until it tumbled—then the guy
Crawled from in under smiling.

Plenty of Ice.

Rodrick—If I started out to explore the polar regions I would teach the Eskimos baseball, so we could get up a nine and pass the time away.

Van Albert—Yes, it certainly would be a fine place to slide for home.

Their Natural Enemy.

"So your teacher will not let you wear rats in your hair?"

Her Ambition.

"Oh, dear!" sighed the girl who was trying to write a telegram, "I wish I was rich."

"Why do you want to be rich?" queried her friend.

"Then I could send telegrams without having to count the words," explained the other.

The Wrong Direction.

"I shouldn't think this aviation business was profitable."

"Why not?"

"Because it is always going up."

BURDENS LIFTED FROM BAD BACKS

Weary is the back that bears the burden of kidney ills. There's no rest nor peace for the man or woman who has a bad back. The distress begins in early morning. You feel lame and not refreshed. It's hard to get out of bed. It hurts to stoop to tie your shoes. All day the ache keeps up. Any sudden movement sends sharp twinges through the back. It is torture to stoop or straighten. At night the sufferer retires to toss and twist and groan. Backache is kidney ache—a throbbing, dull aching in the kidneys. Plasters or liniments won't do. You must get at the cause, inside.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS CURE SICK KIDNEYS

TWICE-TOLD TESTIMONY

A Cure of Severe Kidney Disease Verified By Test of Time

William M. Sears, 429 W. Cherry Street, Nevada, Mo., says: "I was convinced of the great value of Doan's Kidney Pills through personal experience. Four or five months ago I suffered a great deal from a pain across the small of my back, extending at times into my limbs and shoulders. When I stooped or did any work that brought a strain on the muscles of my back, my trouble was aggravated. I tried a number of remedies but without success. After a short time I could see that they were benefiting me, and the contents of two and one-half boxes cured me." (Statement given in May, 1909.)

RE-ENDORSEMENT

On Dec. 3rd, 1908, Mr. Sears said: "I still have great faith in Doan's Kidney Pills. I feel justified in re-endorsing this remedy as it has done so much for me."

How To Tell When The Kidneys Are Disordered

PAINFUL SYMPTOMS

Backache, sideache, pains when stooping or lifting, sudden sharp twinges, rheumatic pains, neuralgia, painful, scanty or too frequent urination, dizzy spells, dropsy.

URINARY SYMPTOMS

Discolored or cloudy urine. Urine that contains sediment. Urine that stains the linen. Painful passages. Blood or shreds in the urine. Let a bottleful of the morning urine stand for 24 hours. If it shows a cloudy or fleecy settling, or a layer of fine grains, like brick-dust, the kidneys are disordered.

NEVER ANY RETURN

A Complete Cure of Kidney Trouble and Dropsy

Mrs. L. L. Babers, 1615 Terry St., Houston, Texas, says: "I hold a very high opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills and with good reason, for three years ago they cured me of kidney trouble that had clung to me for several years. There was a dropsical swelling of my feet and limbs in addition to other symptoms of kidney complaint, and although I used various remedies, I was not helped until I procured Doan's Kidney Pills. Two boxes of this preparation cured me and I have never had the slightest return of my trouble. I have recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to many people who have questioned me about them, and I know of several cases in which they have done the same good work."

Mrs. Blink—The worst is yet to come.

TACK THIS UP

Prescription That Breaks Up the Worst Cold in a Day.

Every winter this prescription is published here and thousands have been benefited by it. "Get two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce of Concentrated Pine compound. Then get half a pint of good whiskey and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful of this mixture after each meal and at bed time. Shake the bottle well each time." But be sure to get only the genuine Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes in a tin screw-top case. Any druggist has it on hand or will quickly get it from the wholesale house. Many other pine extracts are impure and cause nausea.

Weak Spot in His Defense.

A religious worker was visiting a southern penitentiary, when one prisoner in some way took his fancy. This prisoner was a negro, who evinced a religious fervor so deep as it was gratifying to the caller.

"Of what were you accused?" the prisoner was asked.

"Dey says I took a watch," answered the negro. "I made a good fight. I had a dandy lawyer, and he done prove an alibi wif ten witnesses. Den my lawyer he shore made a strong speech to de jury. But it wa'n't no use, sah! I get ten years."

"I don't see why you were not acquitted," said the religious worker.

"Well, sah," explained the prisoner, "dere was shore one weak spot 'bout my defense—dey found de watch in my pocket."—Tit-Bits.

The Appetites of Kings.

The king of Spain makes up for this daily expenditure of activity by a tremendous appetite. I have observed, for that matter, that the majority of sovereigns are valiant trenchermen. Every morning of his life Alfonso XIII. has a good rump steak and potatoes for his first breakfast, often preceded by eggs and sometimes followed by salad and fruit.—From Recollections of M. Paoli in McClure's.

Neglected.

What It Meant.

"Robbie," asked the school mistress, "what does history mean when it says that in the country's pioneer days some of the settlers didn't have a roof over their heads?"

"It means that in them days the woman couldn't afford any merry widow hats!"

His Status.

"Well, my little man," inquired a visitor pleasantly, "who are you?"

"I'm the baby's brother!" was the ingenuous reply.—The Truth Seeker.

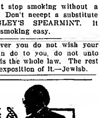
Whatsoever you do not wish your neighbor to do to you, do not unto him. This is the whole law. The rest is a mere exposition of it.—Jewish.

Common Sense



Leads the most intelligent people to use only medicines of known composition. Therefore it is that Dr. Pierce's medicines, the makers of which print every ingredient entering into them upon the bottle-wrappers and attest its correctness under oath, are daily growing in favor. NO SECRETS. NO DECEPTION.

The composition of Dr. Pierce's medicines is open to everybody, Dr. Pierce being desirous of having the search light of investigation turned fully upon his formulæ, being confident that the better the composition of these medicines is known the more will their great curative merits be recognized.

Being wholly made of the active medicinal principles extracted from native forest roots, by exact processes original with Dr. Pierce, and without the use of a drop of alcohol, triple-refined and chemically pure glycerine being used instead in extracting and preserving the curative virtues residing in the roots employed, these medicines are entirely free from the objection of doing harm by creating an appetite for either alcoholic beverages or habit-forming drugs.

Examine the formula on their bottle-wrappers—the same as sworn to by Dr. Pierce, and you will find that his "Golden Medical Discovery," the great blood-purifier, stomach tonic and bowel regulator—the medicine which, while not recommended to cure consumption in its advanced stages (no medicine will do that) yet does cure all those catarrhal conditions of head and throat, weak stomach, torpid liver and bronchial troubles, weak lungs and hang-on-coughs, which, if neglected or badly treated lead up to and finally terminate in consumption.

Take the "Golden Medical Discovery" in time and it is not likely to disappoint you if only you give it a thorough and fair trial. Don't expect miracles. It won't do supernatural things. You must exercise your patience and persevere in its use for a reasonable length of time to get its full benefits. The ingredients of which Dr. Pierce's medicines are composed have the unqualified endorsement of scores of medical leaders—better than any amount of lay, or non-professional, testimonials although the latter are received by thousands.

Don't accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this time-proven remedy OF KNOWN COMPOSITION. ASK YOUR NEIGHBORS. They must know of many cures made by it during past 40 years, right in your own neighborhood.

World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N.Y.

Post Falls, Idaho, the town in which Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Germo are located, is enjoying a big boom and the commercial club of that place is promoting some big enterprises. Mr. and Mrs. Germo evidently are enthusiastic Post Falls boosters. In concluding an article about a recent important meeting of of the commercial club, the Post Falls Advance had the following to say that will be of interest to Red Lake Falls people: "Before adjournment the women composing the Woman's Civic Improvement League of Post Falls, marched into the hall enmasse, and overwhelmed the men folks by the generosity of their offer. Through their President, Mrs. Germo, they announced a contribution to the club of $6600 for use by the club in promoting the enterprise under consideration by it. The men had known that the women intended to make a scoop, but were hardly prepared for one of such magnitude."

Two small mining towns in Idaho, Burka and Mace, were almost completely destroyed and a number of lives lost by a snowslide from the mountains. Dr. Lemieux has two nephews located in these towns and the doctor has visited the places which are only about a mile apart. He says that the towns are located in a canyon with mountains on either side only a few rods apart. So small is the space between the mountains that there is scarcely room for the construction of small houses and two railroads on the bank of the creek that runs through the canyon. He says the railroad is right in front of the houses and it is a combination highway, the roadbed being graded so that it can be used as a wagon road also. Dr. Lemieux has received no word informing him whether or not his relatives received any injuries. Several of the houses were wrecked and others were covered with several feet of snow and it is probable that all the people would have been killed and all of the buildings demolished, if the main slide instead of a branch of it had struck the towns.

A Fair Proposition.

The house committee of a New York club once received this unique complaint:

"I have the honor to inform you that I lunched at the club this afternoon and had as my guests three gentlemen, all well known gourmets. Among other things an omelet was served. It contained only three flies. As an old member of the club, jealous of its reputation, I naturally found this very embarrassing, as, in order to make an equitable division of the omelet, it was necessary either to divide a fly—a nice bit of carving, as you must concede—or forego a fly myself. I beg to suggest that in the future when an omelet is served for four persons it should be either with (a) four flies or (b) no flies at all."

His Strong Point.

A senator who has grown very dignified in recent years was making a speech, says the Saturday Evening Post. After he had finished there was a reception at one of the hotels. A little man pushed eagerly forward.

"Hello, senator!" he shouted.

"How do you do, sir?"

"Say, senator, you remember me? I'm Jones—Jones of Springfield, you know. I met you down there. Remember how full we got together?"

"I do not," replied the senator icily. They pushed Jones away, but soon he was back.

"Hello, senator!" he shouted. "Don't you remember that time down in St. Louis we went out and made a night of it? Jones of Springfield, you know."

They shoved Jones away again, and somebody standing near the senator asked, "Who's your friend?"

"I don't know who he is, but he seems to be hell on reminiscences."

A SLEEPY HEADED MAN

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

It was a geologist and prospector who discovered that the Widow Carson's farm, forty miles from the recognized oil fields, was the center of another basin and so reported to the Sunshine Crude Oil Producing company, capital $1,000,000. That company had gobbled up all the best wells in a large district and was rapidly controlling production.

Moses Perkins was a young man of twenty-six. He was a farmer's son and a farmer himself, and he was not yet married. He had left his farm for a few months to help drill oil wells for the Sunshine company. Moses was hard working and honest. He would put in a long day's work, but he wasn't smart. From the day he began work at $2.50 a day until the day he was discharged, a period of twenty days, the foreman over him applied to him such terms as sleepyhead, idiot, blunderbuss, born fool, and so forth.

One day Perkins was sent for a can of nitroglycerin. On his return he was seen coming along tossing it in the air and catching it when it came down. This was too much. Perkins was discharged.

It was a geologist who differed from all the other geologists that found a new "dip" on the Widow Carson's farm. Her farm was the center of the basin. It was a stony, sterile old farm of 160 acres, and the widow herself was almost as dilapidated as the farm. She was forty years old and gaunt and homely, and she had three gaunt and homely children. The geologist staked his reputation that there was oil beneath her land, and the Sunshine company took him in on a proviso. The first thing was to get the legal privilege of sinking a well, and this was to carry with it a lease in case oil was discovered. There must be more or less beating about the bush to prevent the widow from taking the alarm. The preliminaries were intrusted to a lawyer disguised as a peddler.

When Moses Perkins had got it into his head that there was a Widow Carson somewhere on earth who was of interest to the Sunshine company he figured that it could mean only one thing. Then he began to inquire around, and after a week he lighted on a man who could tell him. Then he put a shirt, collar and a pair of socks into an old satchel and set out for the forty mile walk. In the evening of the second day he arrived at the widow's. He found her and her children as above described. It was next door to poverty. Moses had often dreamed of the wife he was to marry, and he was taken aback. He might have given up his project and retreated in good order had not a peddler arrived the same evening. He was the disguised lawyer of the Sunshine company. He seized on Moses Perkins for a dunderhead and went ahead and talked. The widow didn't catch on, but Moses did. A company wanted her farm for a quarry, and she was ready enough to sign any sort of paper the next day.

Moses had been asked to stay overnight. The peddler must go farther. This left the coast clear for a few hours. Moses had never made love to a woman, but he began while yet the peddler's coattails were fluttering through the gate. He told of his own farm, his prospects, his good health—how he looked in vain for years for the woman of his dreams, but had found her at last. He needn't have done half as much talking. The widow was ready to lease her farm, and she was also ready to marry again. Before midnight she was the promised bride of Moses Perkins. At 10 o'clock the next forenoon she was his wife and her children were calling him pop. At 11 o'clock the peddler arrived with certain documents and a witness. He found the bride sitting on the bridegroom's knee. He intimated that the papers were all ready to sign and that he had a certain sum of money to pass over, but fool Moses had something to say. He was the husband and the man of the house now. As soon as the wedding trip was over he was going to take off his coat and vest and make those 160 acres hump and hustle. The big bowlders lying around would take a roll, and the stony ground would blossom as the rose. Mrs. Carson would have been willing to sell the old place for most anything, but Mrs. Perkins didn't care to even sign a lease.

For six weeks longer Moses was taken for a chap with sawdust in his head. The lawyers and speculators and rings tried in every way to get the best of him, but what they cursed as his stupidity helped him to hold his own. Then he woke up one morning with his head all right. He had found oil exuding from a spring, and he announced the fact to the world at large; also that the farm was for lease or sale. The Sunshine people were not the only ones to rush. Three leases were made, and three companies pledged themselves to pay royalties, and inside of a year Moses Perkins was a millionaire and the Perkins family were eating square meals. The Carson basin turned out to be the greatest find in the state.

"To think that I should have taken you for a lunkhead!" sighed the peddler-lawyer one day when handing Moses a check for $50,000.

"Oh, mebbe I was!" was the good natured reply. "But, you see, I got over it. That's what same lunkheads never do."

He Wasn't an Exception.

It was married men's night at the revival meeting. "Let all you husbands who have troubles in your minds stand up!" shouted the emotional preacher at the height of his spasm. Instantly every man in the church rose to his feet except one. "Ah!" exclaimed the preacher, peering out at this lone sitter, who occupied a chair near the door and apart from the others. "You are one in a million." "It ain't that," piped back this one helplessly as the rest of the congregation turned to gaze suspiciously at him. "I can't get up; I'm paralyzed!"

FIRST AID.

A Case Where It Was Applied Not Wisely, but Too Well.

An extremely ludicrous incident occurred in a fashionable church on a recent Sunday. A young lady, evidently a stranger, of a naturally pale complexion, accidentally let her handkerchief fall on the floor. By repeatedly stooping to reach it furtively she attracted the notice of a gentleman in the pew behind, who thought she was about to faint.

With the best of motives, therefore, he took her gently under the arms and raised her up, greatly to her surprise. As she tried to release herself another gentleman went to her assistance, and before the young lady knew what was the matter they were moving her out into the aisle.

Naturally she was too much astonished to find words for protest, and they had managed to half carry, half lead, her some distance when she directed an appealing look to another gentleman in a pew, as if asking him to help also. He, too, promptly rose from his seat and helped to lift her up and carry her into the vestry room.

There, as the three officious but well meaning gentlemen were trying to force the now thoroughly exasperated lady into an armchair, she recovered her powers of speech, and the verbal explosion that followed, while it cleared away the misunderstanding, moved the very meek men who passed out of the vestry to mutter in unison, "Never again!"

Didn't Keep a Diary.

At an important trial in a London law court one of the witnesses was an Irishwoman who was decidedly hard to handle. She was particularly categorical as to her dates and told how "this happened at 4:27 on Tuesday, this at 6:33 on Friday," and so on. At last the patience of the advocate was exhausted.

"My dear woman," said the exasperated counsel, "do you keep a diary?"

"No, sir," replied the woman, "a dramshop."

SUCCESSFUL MEETING.

Good Attendance of Teachers at Brooks Saturday.

In spite of dissagreeable weather and the condition of the roads there was a good attendance of teachers at the meeting for the teachers in the eastern part of the county held at Brooks last Saturday afternoon. The program was carried out as originally planned with the exception of one number and the meeting was a successful one. A number of school officers were in attendance. Musical numbers on the program were furnished by the Brooks public school chorus.

IDENTITY ESTABLISHED

Boy Burned to Death in Soo Railroad Camp Was Jesse Mots of Strathcona.

The identity of the young man who was burned to death in the Soo railroad camp east of Plummer has been established. The boy's name is Jesse Mots.

Mr. and Mrs. Mendell, mother and stepfather of the boy, who live at Strathcona, some thirty miles north of Thief River Falls, saw an account of the death of young Mots and they went to Bemidji to investigate the affair. Young Mots had stated while working in the railway camp that his home was north of Thief River Falls; and other circumstances surrounding the case tend to firmly establish the identity of the young man.

The boy was burned to death on the night of Feb. 19. The boy was only fifteen years of age, though he was large for his age and appeared to be nineteen or twenty years old.

GRETNA GREEN AFFAIR.

Thief River Falls Young People Surprise Friends.

Two well known Thief River Falls young people stole a march on their friends. It was a near-elopment and so well planned that none of their young friends knew anything about it. Miss Flossie Weir us came down from Thief River Falls on Tuesday evening's train and P. J. Mahon drove down that evening and they were married Wednesday.

The ceremony was performed in Judge S. A. Swanson's office, which is becoming as famous as the little church around the corner, the judge officiating with becoming dignity.

Thief River Falls friends of the young people won't have even the opportunity of throwing rice or old shoes, and they had planned a more hilarious celebration of the happy event, for Mr. and Mrs. Mahon went from here to International Falls, where they will reside.

Mrs A. E. Abell, accompanied by her son and daughter, arrived this week from Van Orin, Ill., and they have taken up their residence on the Jos. Laurent farm in Terrebonne. Mrs. Abell purchased the place, which is probably the finest farm property in the county, last fall, the consideration being $20,000.00, and possession of the property has just been given. The Abells are successful Illinois farmers and they will be welcomed to Red Lake county. They brought some good stock with them, not only good horses and blooded cattle, but a lot of fancy poultry as well.

IMPROVEMENT IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Courses in Manual Training and Agriculture and Domestic Science Added.

At a meeting of the board of education held last evening action was taken which means that there is going to be a big improvement in the public school system. Governor Eberhart is glad that the county optionists have gone "back to the farm."

The American hog has been going some. He has been commanding $10 in the markets recently.

The Ballinger investigation is developing a race of prevaricators. This is so far the sole result of the inquiry.

Minnesota has given 115,121,295 acres to homesteaders and 159,125,731 to railroad corporations and the people have invariably had to pay the cost of constructing the railroads besides.

The strength shown by the county option forces at the convention in St. Paul last week was so menacing to the politicians and the liquor interests that a lot of people haven't got their breath yet.

The state banks of Minnesota show an increase of $5,576,030 in resources and liabilities in 1909 over 1908. The total for 1909 was $103,313,453, the capital stock $12,257,100, and the surplus fund $2,671,137.78. There were 646 state banks operated during 1909, against 616 in 1908.

W. E. McEwen, head of the state labor department, says: Since the passing of the new compulsory educational law 6,000 children have been put in school. In each case the department sent a letter to the parent calling his attention to the law and the reported violation and the child was immediately sent to school.

The day for Easter is the result of an astronomical calculation. It falls upon the first Sunday following the first full moon after the vernal equinox. The sun crosses the spring equinoctial line on March 21. If that day should be a Saturday and the moon reach the full that night, the next day, March 22, will be Easter. The concurrence of events, as stated, has been recorded but once in a calculated period covering beyond two hundred years.

The Breckenridge Telegram advises drastic action by northern Minnesota in saying that "it is not much of a man who will not fight for his home or rights. Let every northern Minnesota representative remember that when he goes to St. Paul next winter to fight for an honest reapportionment and if he cannot get his rights see that no one else gets his. Carry insurgency to the limit and see that the southern part of the state gets nothing until they quit playing the hog."

Some candidates for office never learn the lesson of appealing to the voters in a manner calculated to win popular support. For instance Robert J. Wells, aspirant for state auditor, declares as his principal claim to preferment that he "has fought the battles of the Republican party for thirty-two years." How weak and futile such an argument! A political party owes no man a cent for loyalty, and no man has a right to render a bill for services presumably given in the interest of good government and public welfare. And, then, the auditorship is the biggest job in the state, and other considerations rather than those of political subserviency should govern in his selection. The plea to partizanship isn't a stirring cry.

The Saturday Evening Post tells this: "We've got a right smart ailing folks around here, or they say they are," said the hotel keeper at Mitchell, Indiana. "Now, there's old Uncle Jim. Ninety years old, if he's a day, and always grunting around as if he was ready to die the next minute. He went into the store the other day and the clerk said: 'How be ye today, Uncle Jim?' 'Feelin' awful bad,' said Uncle Jim. 'My stomach is all gone. Can't eat nothin'. Didn't sleep a wink last night for the misery of it. Nigh unto death, I am.' He grunted around some more and then he saw a basket of turnips sittin' there. 'Them's good turnips,' he said to the clerk. 'How much be they?' 'Twenty cents a peck,' says the clerk. 'Well,' says Uncle Jim, 'gimme half a peck of 'em,' and he took them, and I'll be goshswizzled if he didn't pull out his old jackknife and eat that half half peck of raw turnips right then and there."

GOV. JOHN LIND.

Wheelock's Fergus Falls Weekly: Putting aside all questions of party expediency, and looking loyally to what is for the best interests of the state of Minnesota, it is clearly the duty of the democrats to nominate Hon. John Lind for the governorship. The state knows this, and any other nomination will be received with a coldness akin to that which has greeted many of the republican nominations of recent years. The menace of Gov. Eberhart's nomination as the best politician that the machine republicans can select calls for patriotism on the part of democrats, not policy work. Gov. Eberhart must be confronted by Gov. Lind, for the state's own sake, not for the sake of any party.

COUNTY OPTION.

There is a real county option fight on in Minnesota. The convention at St. Paul last week signalized the beginning of an active campaign for the election of a governor and legislature favorable to the passage and approval of a county option law. The convention was made up of earnest and sincere temperance advocates of all parties, creeds and nationalities, and they pledged their support and the support of their friends to any political program that will promise success to their cause.

Both of the old parties will be somewhat disturbed by the action of the county optionists, but the Republican party is put in a particularly embarassing position by the fact that the temperance people in advance refused to support their probable candidate for governor. This leaves the optionists the alternative of supporting the Democratic candidate or putting a third candidate in the field. It is needless, perhaps, to suggest that neither horn of the dilemma is a harbinger of Republican success in sofar at least as the governorship is concerned.

Whatever may be the individual view as to county option, it must be conceded that the people have a right to vote on the question. If the county doesn't like it after it is secured, as if the principle does not prove to be the panacea for liquor ills, license can again be secured by the resubmission to the people.

The Gazette fails to see the slightest infringement of the people's rights in county option or a menace to the public's welfare. If, for instance, Red Lake county doesn't want county option the will of the voters will be registered to that effect. But as an inherent right they should have the privilege of [illegible] for themselves. That is the democracy of Jefferson and the republicanism of Lincoln.

The political significance of the of the movement means nothing to the average citizen. He is probably willing one or all of the old parties should be defeated, or, if necessary, obliterated, in the cause of justice.

EXCHANGE EXCHOES.

Ortonville Herald-Star: It seems to be the ethics of candidates for high office that if they are in favor of any issue they are permitted to say so, but if opposed it at once becomes a "legislative question" and mum is the word.

Sauk Rapids Sentinel-Free Press: Let us pause just a moment, tardy in so doing though we be, to say a word of tribute to the name of Sydney M. Owen. But a few years ago the policies which he advocated so earnestly were ridiculed and branded as socialistic. Yet he lived to see the day when his theories became the theories of progressive men. He was honest and loyal and sincere. He was no politician but a mighty power for good. He helped make the world better.

Fergus Falls Weekly: The men of ample means—the bank presidents, the secretaries of corporations, the general managers of railroads, the high financiers—agree brantitully that the high cost of living is due to the extravagance of the American people. The dictum is usually delivered at a banquet which begins with oysters and sauterne and ends with Gruyere cheese and Chartreuse. The poor devil of a hod carrier, laid off in February because the weather has stopped building operation, has another opinion—but his views do not get into print.

Litchfield Independent: Seventy or eighty years ago Denmark was ruled by its aristocracy. Today the people come to their own. Its present prime minister is the son of a shoemaker, and not one of the eight ministers in his cabinet are of the nobility.

Ada Herald: Southern Minnesota should sit up and take notice. Reapportionment must come or steps should be taken to block all other legislation. This may not be the the proper spirit but northern Minnesota must be given a square deal on representation in the lawmaking body of the state.

S.S.S. PURELY VEGETABLE

It is a generally recognized fact that medicines taken from the botanical kingdom are better adapted to the delicate human system, and safer in every way, than those composed of strong mineral mixtures.

In the early settlement of this land, our forefathers were obliged to procure their medicines from Nature's great laboratories of forest and field. They searched out and compounded the different vegetable materials into teas, concoctions and medicines. That these pioneers found the most potent and valuable of the roots, herbs and barks placed at their disposal, is abundantly proven by the fact that the great majority of them were blessed with rugged health. They cured their diseases and were enabled to do the great preliminary work of civilization because the remedies they used were Nature's remedies, and specially adapted to the needs of humanity.

Among the very best of these vegetable preparations is S. S. S., a medicine made entirely of roots, herbs and barks in such combination as to make it the greatest of all blood purifiers and the finest of all tonics. S. S. S. does not contain the least particle of mineral in any form, and is absolutely a safe medicine for any one to use.

CHEMIST FOUND S. S. S. FREE FROM MINERALS.
A few years ago I was taken with Inflammatory Rheumatism. Upon the advice of a friend I decided to try S.S.S. Before allowing me to take it, however, my guardian, who was a chemist, analyzed the remedy, and pronounced it free from potash or mercury. I continued the remedy, and in two months I was cured completely. The cure was permanent, for I have never since had a touch of Rheumatism, though many times exposed to damp and cold weather.

An Interposition

By SARAH G. RIKER

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

There are people who sneer at the efforts of societies for psychical research. I don't.

There are persons who are always having either dreams that contain revelations or see apparitions or are conscious of something about to happen that does happen. I have no confidence in these people. If I believed in them it would argue that in their makeup there is something especially amenable to some hidden law. But my own experience disproves this. I have had a manifestation—I know of no better name for it—of more consequence than any of these of which I have heard, yet I have had but one in all my life.

And this experience of mine, having come but once to me, in addition to indicating that my being is not unusually susceptible to such influences, points to the fact that others, either living or dead, do interfere at times in the current of our lives.

But it is not my intention to deliver a lecture. I propose to tell a story. I am a bachelor. I live at a club, associate almost entirely with men and have no thought of marriage, and I may state here that I never expect to be married. I do expect, however, in another existence to be psychically united with one who will be to me my other self.

I was traveling and had been traveling for several days with but few and rather short stops. The season was summer, the time of day evening. My conveyance was a railroad train. I was sitting by an open window, looking out upon the fields flying by to the music of the car wheels dropping from the end of one rail and jumping on to another. A favorite occupation of mine on a train has always been to imagine some one swimming along beside the train through the fields of grain that often line the track. On this occasion we were passing numerous such fields, and my image of fancy was swimming along lustily. But as the twilight faded and objects were lost to view, lulled by the rattle of the train, I dropped asleep.

When I awakened a train was beside the one I was on, moving in the same direction and going at the same rate of speed. Indeed, so exactly alike was the velocity of the two trains that I could see no gain or loss whatever to the train beside me. The window sashes of both trains were raised, and I could see the people of the other train, some reading, some lounging, some talking together.

But my attention was fixed on a lady who sat at the window opposite me. Her sash was up as well as mine, so that there was no obstacle, either transparent or opaque, between us. The distance between her and me I suppose was about three feet. She was looking at me with an expression on her face, especially in her eyes, that I never saw in any one before and have never seen since, but I can't describe it. While I looked she spoke to me.

She put out her hand, but before I could grasp it the two trains separated, and in another moment the one in which the lady sat seemed to enter a tunnel, while mine went on in the open.

So vividly impressed was I that when a few minutes later we slowed up I took my grip and when the train stopped at a station I stepped out. After a moment's delay it went on and left me standing on the platform in a very singular mental condition.

"Will another train be along soon?" I asked of a station man.

"From the west?"

"No; from the east."

"No train from the east for four hours."

I was puzzled. I had been coming eastward.

"Is this track double beyond the station?" I asked presently.

"No double track on this line."

"What?"

"Single track from here both ways all the way to the terminals."

An uncanny feeling came over me. I had seen a train on a track beside me, talked with a woman on that train and had obeyed her instructions. As soon as I could recover myself I walked in a half dazed condition into the station and sat down. I remember nothing but a clicking of a telegraph instrument. How long I sat there I don't know, but when I came to my usual consciousness it was at hearing the telegraph operator say to a man outside:

"Great heavens! No. 23 has been wrecked on the bridge above! Bridge let the whole train down, with a terrible loss of life!"

Here was more to intensify that feeling of awe that had taken possession of me. A phantom woman on a phantom train had warned me of a real railroad accident in which I should probably have been killed.

From that day to this I have treasured an image in my heart—the woman real, spiritual or creation of my own brain. I have a theory of who she is or was. When I was a child I played with a little girl who died. Did I discern anything in the features of the woman to remind me of the child? No. A grown woman bears little resemblance to a child. But would the spirit child grow after death? Not likely, yet, appearing to me, I might expect that she would show herself as she would have been had she lived.

Living.

A wearied pilgrim, I have wandered here
Twice five-and-twenty, bate me but one year.
Long have I lasted in this world, 'tis true,
But yet those years that I have lived are few.
Who by his gray hairs doth his lusters tell
Lives not those years, but he that lives them well.
One man has reached his sixty years, but he
Of all those threescore has not lived half three.
He lives who lives to virtue. Men who cast
Their ends for pleasure do not live, but last.

Miss Lucy Benoit of Red Lake Falls has spent the past week here with friends.

The teachers' meeting which was held here Saturday was well attended, many coming a great distance to attend the meeting. All the participants did particularly well. The discourses by Miss Mary Donis and Miss Agnes Engebretson were rendered in their forcible and eloquent manner.

Miss Coleman on "First Year's Work in Reading," read a very interesting and excellent paper, her subject showing careful thought and preparation.

The meeting closed with an entertaining speech by Supt. H. F. Anderson and discussions on the various subjects treated by all the teachers present. Appreciation of Mr. Anderson's efforts in giving this meeting was shown by the large number who were present, all who attended the meeting feeling they had spent a pleasant and profitable afternoon.

Natural Deduction.

On Safe Ground.

A young clergyman who had been appointed to a curacy in one of the parishes of an English university town was embarrassed by the thought of criticism in his cultivated congregation. He sought counsel from his father, an old and sagacious vicar, saying:

"Father, I am hampered in my ministry in the pulpit I am now serving. If I cite anything from geology there is Professor A., the eminent expert in this science, right before me. If I use an illustration in Roman mythology, then there is Professor B. ready to trip me up for my inaccuracy. If I instance something in English literature that pleases me, I am cowed by the presence of the learned doctor who holds the chair of English literature here. What shall I do?"

The old man replied:

"Do not be discouraged. I'll give you safe advice. Preach the gospel. They probably know very little of that."

Impertinent.

Sarah, duchess of Marlborough, one day remarked to her grandson, Jack Spencer, "Jack, you must marry, and I will give you a list of the ladies you may propose to."

"Very well, grannie," he said, and he proposed to the first on the list. When he came back with his wife from their wedding tour they went to pay their respects to the old lady.

"Well, now," she said, "I am the root, and you are only the branches, and therefore you must always pay me a great deal of deference."

"That is all very well," said Jack impertinently, "but I think the branches would flourish a great deal better if the root was underground."

Greeley's Awful Writing.

Horace Greeley left behind him a very frank criticism of the legibility of his own chirography. Being uptown in New York one day and wishing to send a telegram and also to get shaved, he entered a hotel and sent his dispatch. Then, passing into the barber shop, he sat down in a chair and, according to custom, was soon sound asleep.

Meantime the telegram had created a decided sensation, Mr. Greeley having thrown it down hastily on the desk and neglected to translate it. Nobody, from the manager down, being able to supply a legible equivalent for the mysterious characters, a messenger was sent into the barber shop with the screed.

Waking with a start and supposing that the boy had brought an answer to his dispatch, Mr. Greeley took the paper, scanned it for a moment and then, with a look of deep disgust, piped out: "What blamed idiot wrote this?"

THE MANURE SPREADER

The purchasing and using of a manure spreader on the farm is one of the best investments a farmer can make. If he has horses and cattle he has the manure, which is the most valuable of all farm by-products. By applying it to the land with a spreader as much as a dollar a ton can be saved, which means a return of from 25 to 100 per cent on the money invested in a spreader. We must apply the manure more carefully to our land. The spreader makes it possible. The farm must be made more fertile and the spreader will help to do it with a saving of labor. The spreader applies the manure so that it does the most good.

WILL RUSH WORK ON THE BIG DAM

Work on Big Louisville Dam to be Commenced at Once.

Will Supply Power for Crookston Grand Forks and East Grand Forks.

As soon as the frost is out of the ground crews will commence work on the 3500 horse power dam on the Red Lake river at Louisville, six miles west of this city. The work will be rushed, day and night crews will be employed, and it is expected that the dam will be completed by Nov. 1. When the dam is completed the power will be transmitted to Crookston, East Grand Forks and Grand Forks and will be used for commercial purposes in those cities.

We All Get Soaked, Anyhow.

Folly, Genius and Common Sense once went walking and came to a stream. Genius, having his head in the clouds, naturally started to walk across, paying no attention to the depth. The waters soon went over his head, and he was drowned. Common Sense hunted for a safe way to get across, and finally found a foot log. As he got out about the center of the stream the log swayed, and he fell into the water and sank to rise no more. Folly stopped at the bank of the stream to amuse himself by throwing pebbles into the water and watching the waves. He sat upon the moist, cold bank until he caught a cold which developed into pneumonia, of which he soon died. Moral.—It doesn't make any difference, after all, whether you are a genius, a sage or a fool. You'll get it in the neck sooner or later anyway!—Ex.

Will J. Lieb of Minneapolis, traveling freight agent for the Milwaukee railroad, was in town today.

SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT

Students of Brooks School Appear In Public.

Brooks, Minn.—The teachers and pupils of the Brooks school gave an entertainment in their school house on March eleventh. The teachers, Miss Davies and Miss Coleman, made arrangements to have the program in the afternoon and repeat it in the evening which gave all the patrons an opportunity to attend. The afternoon program was well attended and it reflects much credit upon Miss Davies' and Miss Coleman's ability to remark that a greater part of the audience returned in the evening to hear the same program. Altho the roads were in bad condition nearly all of the rural patrons showed their appreciation of the teachers' efforts by attending. The program was well prepared and the teachers deserved, as they received, much praise for their untiring and conscientious efforts in making the program a credit to the scholars and the scholars a credit to the community.

The correspondent was fortunate in being able to attend and express the sentiments of the community in hoping that we may have the pleasure of going again.

THE GOVERNOR'S APPOINTMENTS

But the Governor Got Into Trouble When Politics Received Consideration.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, March 15—Governor Eberhart is fortunate when he is able to take the example of his predecessor as his guide. Then he makes no mistake. It is only when he deviates from it that he finds his path beset by thorns. We see that in the course he has pursued with regard to the appointment of regents of the State University. The thing for the governor to do was always clear. By reappointing Governor Johnson's nominee he would be sure not only of having good men on the board but of appointing men who would work in harmony with their associates. The governor hesitated to do this. He let it be known that his mind was not quite made up with regard to some of them. At once his office was besieged by applicants and by the friends of applicants who urged their conflicting claims. There were those even who assumed to dictate the governor's course to him. The upshot of the matter has been that in order to avoid the entanglements that original appointments would be certain to produce, the governor, after a period of vacillation, has found the only safe way out of his dilemma is to ignore the claims and demands of his political associates and to reappoint the retiring regents.

Regents Appointed.

That is really why B. F. Nelson, C. A. Smith and Pierce Butler are still members of the board. Two of these gentlemen are Democrats. One is nominally a Republican, although his affiliations with party leaders are understood in recent years not to have been close, at all events R. C. Dunn seems to cast reflections on his loyalty, and Mr. Dunn keeps pretty close tab on public men. The only one of those appointments that has seemed to be in serious doubt is Pierce Butler. Butler is an aggressive Democrat. In the election campaign of 1906 he was a candidate for the senate in the Midway district. He was defeated by a narrow margin by Senator Hackney. He attributed his defeat to votes illegally cast by students of the Midway colleges and inaugurated a contest which proved to entail large expenses on the state. The governor hesitated long before he made up his mind to appoint him. Great pressure was brought to bear, however, to secure his retention behind which were the influences which backed Butler in his legislative campaign, the history of which would in itself prove interesting reading. In order to avoid antagonizing these influences and at the same time get out of appointing Butler, the governor is understood to have gone so far as to sound James J. Hill himself to see if he would not consent to undertake the management of the University. Mr. Hill found the demands on his time too great and the governor, disregarding the recommendations of his Republican friends, decided to retain the Johnson appointee.

The Farmer Representative.

With regard to the place made vacant by the death of S. M. Owen, the governor unfortunately did not have that recourse, and I am afraid he has got into trouble by the course he did pursue, although Milton M. Williams of Little Falls, who received the appointment is not considered objectional. Mr. Owen, however, represented the agricultural interest in a sense that Mr. Williams can hardly be said to. Mr. Owen spent a lifetime in the study of agricultural needs. He entered as few men do who are not actually farmers into the interest of farmers. His interests were identical with theirs. The paper he had conducted for so many years had done much to instruct farmers in better methods. With Mr. Williams on the other hand agriculture is understood to be a mere recreation—a side issue. He farms for pleasure rather than for profit. He is a good man no doubt and will make a good regent, but it is very questionable whether he is in a position to advise the board with any unusual intelligence as to the steps it is necessary to take in order best to advance the interests of agricultural education.

GETTING STOCK IN

Fournet Furniture Store Will be Opened Soon.

J. F. Fournet, who is to open a furniture store in the Kaus block, is here this week and is unpacking and arranging a big stock of goods in the store building. Mr. Fournet says that he expects to have the store ready to open for business about March 25. Mr. Fournet will rent a house and will move his family here soon.

FARMER AND EDITOR.

Agricultural Students Advised to Co-operate with Papers.

"The country newspaper is the greatest agency for the betterment of your community, and it will be progressive or backward in the degree that you support it" is what L. J. Boughner, city editor of the Minneapolis Tribune, told the 400 students at the state agricultural school yesterday. "When you go back to the farm, look up the editor of your local newspaper," he urged, "and make a friend of him. The editor of your local newspaper will help you in everything you undertake for the upbuilding of your locality. You need his co-operation and he needs yours."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Down at the Hardware Store.

As the sun shone bright and things commenced to look as if spring had come at last, a warm discussion took place between a sad iron and a kitchen range after being idle all winter.

When pressed for an explanation, in order to smooth over things, the sad iron said the range got hot and flew off its base because it was a black leg and a fuel.

The range turned its back and said the sad iron without reason went off the handle. At this the jackknives opened up and handled some cutting remarks which caused the case to open and request them to pocket their insults; but they refused to back out of the discussion or shut up. It had grown so spirited that the thermometers dropped some remarks, but auger bit it because it had bore enough.

The plumb tried its level best to square things, but everything was so hot that a bar of solder began to run and was lead away by a hand saw which was screwed up to such a pitch that it showed its teeth and said that it never saw such cutting up.

But the ice cream freezer kept cool and turned around with an icy stare because it is quicker than lightening when it is stirred up.

The range lost its pipe and could not smoke and began to elbow its way along as the hose turned to rubber and started to spout, but the gun went off half cocked and plugged it.

The paint began to brush its coat and it began to quiet down and did not wax grater as a hob nail raised its head and in a rasping voice said, "Bless my soul! I'll soon be driven to it."

When ready to build that house or barn, let us figure on your hardware bill. The store that saves you money, Mittwer's Hardware.

Colonize Northern Minnesota.

The first party of Holland farmers who are being brought to this county by Bishop McGolrick, in furtherance of his plans to settle the lands of Northern Minnesota with people from the larger cities of the country, sailed today.

These farmers are experts in dairying and have thoroughly studied the problem of intensive farming. They will be brought to America and will settle on farms in Mille Lacs county. They are expected to arrive in Minnesota about March 20.

These farmers will act as instructors to other settlers who will come later. The company behind Bishop McGolrick has several large tracts of land, which will be settled with poor people from the large cities of America.—Duluth Herald.

160 Acres, A Bargain.

This land lays fine, well drained and is the So. West quarter of Section 21, Lambert township. This land is convenient to Brooks P. O., schools, churches, etc. As I am far away from it will sell it cheap, give long time and low rate of interest. Address Peter W. Decker, 74 Monroe St. Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE NEW WORK IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Big Opportunity for Growth in the Public School Work.

Rural Schools May Become Associated With Central School.

As announced in the last issue of the Gazette courses in manual training and agriculture and domestic science are to be added to the course of study in the Red Lake Falls high school next year.

The board of education at its last meeting and after careful investigation of the work as carried on in near-by schools came to the decision as stated above. Those who visited the schools made a very favorable report. They believe that these schools are doing practical and work that should be offered to students in every good high school.

Two new teachers, one for manual training and agriculture and one for domestic science, will be employed and good equipment will be purchased so that the work can be carried on in approved manner.

The law provides that where this work is undertaken rural schools in districts surrounding the central school may become associated with the central school. In order to do this a small tax levy is required to be made in each district becoming associated, the students from that district then having the right to take up the work in the central school and the board of education in each associating district to select one of the members to serve with the board of the central school. It will be well for the members of the rural boards to investigate the merits of the proposition to become associated with the Red Lake Falls city school.

The formal resolution making the proposition of association, and adopted at the last meeting of the board of education, is as follows:

Whereas, the 1909 Legislature of the State of Minnesota, recognizing the great need in the rural schools for the teaching of agriculture, home economics and manual training, and seeing the practical impossibility of carrying out such courses in the rural schools themselves with their present equipment and teaching force, was moved to enact legislation (See General Laws of Minnesota 1909, Chap. 247, sec. 9–12) authorizing (1) the association of rural schools with state high and graded schools offering these subjects in their courses of study, (2) the petition and election for association to be carried on as now provided by the law for consolidation, (3) the assistance in the support of such courses of study in the central school by a tax levy of not less than one mill nor more than four mills in each of the associating districts, and (4) the selection of one of its members by each rural district board to act with the school board of the central school in carrying out the provisions of the act, and

Whereas the Board of Education in Independent District No. 15 of the City of Red Lake Falls has already taken action to establish courses in agriculture, home economics, and manual training in the Red Lake Falls High School at the opening of the school year in September, 1910,

Therefore, be it resolved by the Board of Independent District No. 15 that it is their desire to encourage this association of rural districts and that by this resolution they invite members of school boards of rural school districts surrounding Red Lake Falls and the patrons and tax-payers of those districts to take action with a view to voting upon association with Independent District No. 15 at the coming annual school meeting in July for the purpose of giving to the children in these associating rural districts the benefits of instruction in agriculture, home economics and manual training.

By the Board of Education in Independent District No. 15.

One Doctor—Only One

No sense in running from one doctor to another! Select the best one, then stand by him. No sense either in trying this thing, that thing, for your cough. Carefully, deliberately select the best cough medicine, then take it. Stick to it. Ask your doctor about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for throat and lung troubles. Sold for nearly seventy years. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Why try this thing, that thing, for your constipation? Why not stick to the good old reliable family laxative—Ayer's Pills? Ask your doctor if he approves this advice.

If the meat packers employed a less expensive pack of lawyers the price of beef could be reduced.

There are several senators and representatives from Minnesota who would just as soon the ship subsidy bill did not come to a vote this spring.

The Hutchinson Leader states a salient truth in saying that a man elected or appointed for purely political reasons is handicapped in his efforts to honestly serve the public.

The city papers announce that Dan O'Neill of Thief River will be a candidate for representative. This is a free country and Dan has our permission to test his political prowess.

The demand for John Lind becomes more and more insistent as the campaign approaches, and there is reason to believe that Mr. Lind will yield to the importunities of his friends.

It is unofficially announced that the Republican State Convention will be held on June 15 at the St. Paul auditorium. The Democrats will not hold their meeting until August or September.

St. Paul is now in the throes of a municipal campaign. Henry [illegible] is the Democratic and Herbert P. Keller the Republican candidate, and the election promises to be warmly contested.

Governor Eberhart defies the county optionists to do their worst. But that really doesn't prove anything, since Grecian history tells us of one Ajax who defied the lightning. But he perished.

Irving Caswell seems to be walking away with the Republican nomination for clerk of the supreme court. If merit and ability count for anything Mr. Caswell ought to have an easy victory over the [illegible] crowd.

The Fourth of July speech delivered by Governor Johnson in Red Red Lake Falls in [illegible] is reproduced in the book issued by Frank A. Day. Often we do not know that history is being made until the future unrolls the scroll.

The new "night letter telegrams" went into effect in the Western Union and North American offices Monday night. Fifty words may now be transmitted at night for the same money as ten words cost during the day. It is believed that the system will shortly become very popular.

No fair minded person can blame the people of northern Minnesota for insisting on a legislative reapportionment, and we do not believe that in a general way the people of other portions of the state will be opposed to reapportionment, says the Browns Valley Tribune. Some members of the legislature from southern counties fight against reapportionment because they have fear of legislating themselves out of office, but the mass of the people don't care about this. The Republican party should endorse reapportionment in its platform and thus go on record for a square proposition.

The Outlook has figured out that the government pays the railroads more for transporting a 200 pound sack of mail the average haul of [illegible] miles, which magazines get, than a 200 pound man pays for riding the same distance; and the man has a nice comfortable seat and a window to look out of. A 200 pound sack of free advertising printed in the government printing office and franked out to Minnesota by a congressman to help build up his political health costs the government more railroad fare than it would cost to ship the congressman himself.

The Duluth News-Tribune is talking out in meeting again. Editor Mitchell says:

If ever a party needed some one strong enough and rough enough to scissor its whiskers and pry it from its bed of moss it is the republican party of Minnesota. It is today but a somnolent annex to cupidity, to be sold, bartered and traded to a militant, vigorous, well-grounded democracy. Its candidates speak in platitudes and generalizations. It is systematically kept divided and bewildered by half a dozen purely selfish, dishonest and demagogic issues. One genuine, sincere, thoroughly honest and timely idea would drive it to panic.

The tax levy for the state revenue probably will be reduced next year to less than 1 mill, for the first time in years. State Auditor S. G. Iverson says the decision in the four per cent gross earnings case will fill up the state treasury so that it will go through the famine period next December and January without a deficit and that next year the state levy should be materially reduced. Two years ago the state levy was 1.7 mills. Last year it was cut to 1.2 mills and this year to 1 mill flat. This year the increased railroad taxes will be quite sufficient to keep a surplus in the treasury. Heavy payments of railroad taxes in the last few years have wiped out the recent deficit and when all are in the state will have over $2,000,000 of cash on hand.

EXCHANGE EXCHOES.

Walker Pilot: The politicians who are proclaiming Governor Eberhart as the man of the hour, appear to be having some trouble in getting the voters to think for a minute that there is anything to it.

Fairmont Sentinel: One reason why Democrats favor the nomination of John Lind for governor is that it would obviate the expense and necessity of opening headquarters. The people would manage his campaign.

Albert Lea Standard: A true democratic principle is to tax wealth, not poverty, and until this is accomplished by the election of trustworthy state legislators and congressmen, privilege, the favored classes, will have the advantage and continue to rule.

Foley Independent: We sincerely hope the present session of congress will do something definite toward establishing a tariff commission for there has already been too much juggling with that subject. It is a matter for political economists, not political scientists.

Fairmont Sentinel: If the Minnesota Republican congressmen in their campaign speeches uphold Taft and the tariff and the ship subsidy and Ballinger and the corporation cabinet, they are sure to go down to defeat and if they don't they haven't any business in the Republican party. Wonder which horn of the dilemma they will take.

Willmar Journal: The rottenness of the professional politicians is plainly discerned by the trades and deals they are continually trying to put through. And especially is Ramsey county full of just such political rottenness. Just as long as there are kept men, who will say to other candidates, turn over your votes to my candidate and I will turn my votes to you, just as long will honest men try to keep out of politics. Would that some of the trading tricksters of the Republican party of Minnesota were gotten rid of before the next campaign!

Sauk Rapids Sentinel-Free Press: President Taft ought to take the man who picked out his cabinet for him down to the Potomac some morning and push him in. From Wickersham, the Standard Oil graduate, and Knox, the Morgan puppet, down through Ballinger, the Guggenheimer attorney, and Hitchcock, the Cannon-Aldrich machinist, to old "Granny" Wilson, there is not any man in the cabinet of any force and power who is a friend of the people. MeVeagh is all right but what chance has he when Aldrich and Cannon control the finances of the country? A thorough housecleaning in the White House some afternoon when the cabinet happened to be in session would do more to put the Taft administration right than almost anything else.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

New York Press: The greatest social gift is having plenty of money.

Not enough good folk die young to keep the death rate decreasing.

All you have to do to want a thing so you can't sleep about it is not to be able to get it.

Old age has as short a memory about the error of its youth as a long one about its virtues.

The worst thing about marrying a woman is how many of her family you have to marry at the same time.

Pointed Paragraphs.

Chicago News: Pay as you go—but don't go too often.

Many a man has to be scared into being good.

If you would please your neighbor say less than you think.

No, Cordelia, it isn't called "commonsense" because it is so common.

A man's opinions are subject to change—save the good one he has of himself.

Anyway, spinsters and old bachelors always agree as to how children should be brought up.

A woman shouldn't be foolish about her age. It is often better to tell the truth than to have it guessed at.

After it is all over the average man wastes a lot of time telling what he would do if he had another chance.

How absurd it is that the young man in love with a pretty girl never thinks to investigate her cooking until it is too late.

A Living Emetic.

A servant who did not find her way very promptly to the kitchen one morning was visited by her mistress, who found her in bed suffering from pain and violent sickness. She explained that she had a cold and had taken some medicine which had been recommended for the children.

"How much did you take?" asked her mistress.

"Well, mum, I went by the directions on the bottle. They said, 'Ten drops for an infant, thirty drops for an adult and a tablespoonful for an emetic.' I knew I wasn't an infant or adult, so I thought I must be an emetic, and the pesky stuff has pretty nigh turned me inside out."

THE GOVERNOR'S APPOINTMENTS

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

The Governor Seeks Advice.

But Mr. Williams was merely a compromise candidate and not of the sort of regent the governor started out to appoint. This is made plain from a letter the governor addressed to a high dignitary of a powerful church within the past month. In that letter the governor told the churchman that there were three qualifications he wanted the regent to possess. First, he wanted him to be affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church. Second, he must be a farmer. Third, he should if possible be a German. The good offices of the churchman were solicited to find out and recommend such a man if possible.

The Man Found.

Priests and preachers are but human, and no doubt the churchman in question was gratified that the governor of the state should consult him in so important a matter. At all events he took the trouble to consult the inferior clergy on the subject and other friends upon whose advice he felt he should rely. The result was that a man was found who filled the governor's requirements. He was a farmer. He was a German. He was a Catholic. Moreover he was identified with the great and growing agricultural industry of the state—that of dairying. He is the president of the State Dairymen's Association. He has for years been a prominent institute worker. He conducts one of the most notable dairy farms and owns one of the finest pure-bred dairy herds in the state. He is the editor of a popular agricultural dairy paper—The Minnesota Dairyman. I refer to W. F. Schilling of Northfield.

W. F. Schilling Recommended.

The churchman had long known Mr. Schilling. He had no hesitation in indorsing him as a man whose character and attainments qualified him to fill the office for which the governor sought an incumbent. It must be understood that Mr. Schilling did not seek this appointment. Through the churchman the appointment sought him out. He filled every condition the governor laid down. The churchman recommended him to the governor in a letter which spoke of his qualifications in the most appreciative terms. The upshot of the matter was that the governor sent for Mr. Schilling and that a personal interview resulted.

Obnoxious Associates.

In that interview and from other sources of information the governor learned that while a Republican Mr. Schilling had voted for Governor Johnson. He also learned, and this appears to have been Mr. Schilling's damning disqualification that for some years he has been associated more or less intimately in a business way with a prominent Third district statesman who has given some public intimation that he does not hold Governor Eberhart in very high regard. I refer to the ex-congressman editor, Joel P. Heatwole. The governor could stand for almost everything else. He could not stand for that. It would never do for his administration to recognize in any way so belligerent an insurgent and so pronounced an opponent to the governor's nomination.

The Churchman Turned Down.

In effect that is what the governor let it be understood when he later wrote a letter to the churchman turning the recommendation down cold which he had solicited. That was in effect, too, the reply he made to the dairymen of the state who besieged the governor's office urging Mr. Schilling's appointment. Neither the churchman nor the dairymen, I am given to understand, take to it kindly. The church dignitary is not accustomed to having advice solicited disregarded or recommendations he makes lightly set aside for reasons which under the circumstances he fails to recognize as substantial. The dairymen are not satisfied to see one they have honored displaced by a man who keeps a few Guernseys on his farm which the hired help attend to. Altogether it is a pretty kettle of fish which may later be served up to the governor as a nice mess of crow.

Another of the Disgruntled.

Nor do the governor's troubles in this connection appear to end here. In this his first important original appointment he appears to have given serious cause of offense not only to those I have mentioned but to P. V. Collins of Minneapolis, the editor of a leading Minnesota agricultural paper who ever since Mr. Owen's death has made no secret of the fact that he regarded himself as his logical successor. What backing Mr. Collins had for the position I do not know. Having a proper sense of his own importance he may have thought he did not need any. The governor, however, thought differently apparently and he too is disqualified.

Conservation and Conversation.

However the prospects are it is more than likely that all these minor grievances and trivial annoyances which beset the executive office will be obliterated by the glory of the conservation convention which we are to have here this week. The governor is counting on a great triumph there and the prospects are that he will not be disappointed. Certainly so far as numbers go he will not be if those who have received commissions from him accrediting them as delegates all attend. It certainly will prove a conspicious political triumph if they all come here as administration partizans.

But is to be Non-Partizan.

I should not have said that, of course. There is to be no politics at all in this conservation convention. Everybody is going to pull together for the state and not think of doing anything else but boost waterways and canals and things. I notice that the railroads are taking a great interest in the meeting and that their contributions to its expense fund are of the most liberal character. Let us indulge the hope that they will not be its only beneficiaries.

The Scrap Book

Five to the Good.

"When Mr. Frith," a millionaire art collector said, "sold me my picture of a child feeding white rabbits he told me an amusing story connected therewith.

"He purchased for models, he said, a dozen white rabbits from a dealer and ordered them sent home. The man who brought them to him foolishly left them in the garden—Mr. Frith lived in the country at the time—and naturally the little animals all got away through the fence. Well, when Mr. Frith returned and found his rabbits gone he searched the neighborhood for them manfully. He got most of them back, but not all. And, meeting the dealer next day, he said angrily:

"'What did you mean by leaving the rabbits loose on my lawn, as you did? I had a frightful task to capture them, and as it was I got only eleven.'

"The dealer scratched his ear.

"'But eleven was pretty good, governor,' he said. 'I'd left only six, ye know. The rest was comin' on tomorrow.'"

Satisfied.

One evening a very tall man went to the theater and took a prominent seat in the third or fourth row from the stage. Before the curtain rose a cry of "Down in front!" became general from behind. The tall man, finding the eyes of the entire audience turned toward him, felt obliged to do something, and so he proceeded to raise himself to a standing position in such a manner, however, as to convey an impression that there was no end to him. He was, in fact, nearly seven feet high, and when at last he had risen to his full height he slowly glanced around at the astonished audience and very deliberately remarked:

"Gentlemen, to satisfy you that I was sitting down I now stand up."

A burst of laughter and applause followed, amidst which the manager, with beaming face, came forward and conducted the gentleman to a private box.

The Way It Helps.

When Sir Andrew Clark, Mr. Gladstone's physician, recommended a patient to drink wine the latter expressed some surprise, saying he thought Sir Andrew was a temperance doctor, to which Sir Andrew Clark replied:

"Oh, wine does sometimes help you to get through work. For instance, I have often twenty letters to answer after dinner, and a pint of champagne is a great help."

"Indeed," said the patient, "does a pint of champagne really help you to answer the twenty letters?"

"No, no!" said Sir Andrew. "But when I've had a pint of champagne I don't care a rap whether I answer them or not!"

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

The skin is composed of two distinct layers. One is known as the epidermis, or outer skin, which has no fibres, and serves principally as a covering to the body, and a protection from outward dangers to the delicate flesh beneath. The other layer is known as the derma, or true skin, and is composed of elastic fibres, fat tissue, glands, lymphatics, nerves, etc. The thousands of tiny veins and arteries with which it is interlaced constantly supply every fibre and tissue with healthful properties from the circulation to keep the skin smooth and perfect.

This is changed, however, when the blood becomes infected with humors, acids or impurities. Instead of constantly supplying rich, nutritive properties to the skin, the circulation deposits the acrid impurity with which it is contaminated into the sensitive fibres and tissues. This causes irritation and inflammation, which splits or breaks the thin outer cuticle, while the tissues beneath ulcerate and discharge upon the surface in the form of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Tetter, etc. There is likewise a dry form of skin diseases, such as Acne, Psoriasis, etc. In these varieties the humor in the blood diseases and inflames the glands, hair follicles, etc., causing them to swell and protrude to the outer surface. Pimples, rashes, eruptions and like troubles, are all dependent on imperfect blood, and no one can have a good complexion, free from humiliating blemishes, unless the skin is kept healthy by good blood.

S.S.S. CURED HER.

Some time ago I was troubled with a severe skin affection called Acne. Small pimples would appear on my face and neck which would in time fester and become inflamed. My complexion was muddy and sallow and most unsightly. I chanced to read about S.S.S., and concluded to give it a trial; the result was entirely satisfactory, my complexion soon becoming clear, the pimples disappearing, and my skin became soft and smooth. I cannot too highly recommend S.S.S. to any who are likewise afflicted.

MRS. LUCY GOODING
Pollock, La.

S.S.S. cures Skin Diseases of every kind by neutralizing the acids and removing the humors from the blood. It cools the acid-heated circulation, builds it up to normal strength, multiplies its rich, nutritious corpuscles, and adds to its purity in every way. Then the skin, instead of being irritated, inflamed and diseased by acrid impurities or fiery humors, is nourished, soothed and softened by a cooling, healthy stream of blood. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and therein lies its ability to cure skin diseases. Book on Skin Diseases and medical advice free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Walked In His Sleep.

Barefoot and clad only in a nightshirt, Raymond O'Hara, the thirteen year old son of Ed O'Hara, the drayman, walked over a mile between the hours of one and two last Friday morning, when the thermometer stood about 15 degrees below zero.

The young boy had a dream that his father had asked him to go for a doctor to attend his mother, who was sick, and he arose from his bed while asleep and started upon the journey. The O'Hara's live over near the Knox school and the boy went north to the Red Lake river, a distance of about nine blocks. When he reached the river he awoke, but being somewhat bewildered he did not make a straight path for home and traveled a distance of about eleven blocks while making the return trip. When he arrived home his feet were quite badly frozen and he was thoroughly chilled. He will suffer no bad effects from his journey, however.—Thief River News.

THE FAVORITE WON.

A Prizefight Referee Who "Seen His Duty and Done It."

In a sporting resort in the east end of London a popular Irish pugilist was matched against a burly and clever negro. The Irishman was a hot favorite, and his friends bet heavily that he would whip his colored opponent. The referee was also an Irishman, and when in the first round the negro reached the Irish fighter's jaw and the latter's head thumped the boards with a crash that seemed to preclude further contest the following monologue by the referee as he stood over the fallen favorite, counting the seconds, took place:

"One!" (In an undertone to his gasping compatriot: "Come on, man; get up out o' that. Are yez goin' to let this black son of Ham say he knocked yez out?)

"YOUR'E OUT, YOU NAYGUR."

"Two! (Wurrah, man, can't yez raise yourself and listen to what I'm tellin' yez? Come on; get up!)

"Three! (For the sake of yer fathers that bled on many a field get up and wipe up the floor with this black smoke that's grinnin' at yez!)

"Four! (An' sure are yez goin' to lie there slapin' while this limb of Satan takes all the money? Get up, I say, afore I pull yez up!)"

This sort of entreaty continued until, as the disgusted referee lingered on the final count, the badly dazed Irish pugilist staggered to his feet, swung wildly at the unguarded negro and bowled him over unexpectedly.

Quick as a flash the ever ready referee sprang to the prostrate colored man, who, though dazed and weak, was wildly struggling to regain his feet, and counted:

"One, two, three, four, five and five is ten! You're out, you naygur!"

Why He Didn't Go to Church.

A Scottish minister who was indefatigable in looking up his folk one day called upon a parishioner. "Richard," he said, "I hae na seen ye at the kirk for some time and wad like to know the reason."

"Weel, sir," answered Richard, "I hae three decided objections to goin'—firstly, I dinna believe in bein' whaur ye does a' the talkin'; secondly, I dinna believe in sic muckle singin', an', thirdly an' in conclusion, 'twas there I got my wife."

A Good Explanation.

Father—But, do tell me, Alfred, how could you fail again?

Son—Well, you see, we had another examination.

A Pertinent Query.

Freddy suddenly stopped playing with his blocks and gazed thoughtfully across the room. After a moment's contemplation he turned to his father.

VALERIA AND THE SPICE MAN.

The Romance That Was Woven Into a Rag Carpet.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

When Valeria Bird was thirty-five years old she emptied all her closets and wardrobes and spread the contents about her room—over the chairs and on the bed or wherever space afforded.

Like all the Birds, Valeria was fond of dress, and "the summer I had the pink organdie," "the winter I wore the green cloak" and other instances were fixed dates in Valeria's memory. Valeria's clothes formed the calendar of her years.

"It's all they're good for," she said decisively. "I'll cut them into carpet rags and make me a handsome carpet. There won't be another like it in Littleville."

And there wasn't another one that compared with Valeria Bird's rag carpet when it was woven and in place on the sitting room floor. Out in the woodshed was an old loom—Uncle Joshua Bird had been a famous weaver in his day—and Valeria had learned how to operate it in the face of Aunt Susanna's strong disapproval.

"You'll spread your feet all out of shape working that treadle. Your Uncle Joshua had flat foot to the end of his days from that old loom! You better take it over to the blind weaver. He can do it first rate so long as it's hit or miss"—

"'Tisn't going to be hit or miss," said Valeria stubbornly. "No one could make it this way but me."

When it was completed and the breadths sewed together it made a large carpet, for Valeria had had many garments. Aunt Susanna peered curiously at the intricate pattern.

"I never see a rag carpet like that. What's that little white square in the middle breadth, and how did you fix it so's all those different colored stripes would make squares outside each other? And the outside border is black! That's real tasty!"

"HAVE YOU LOST ANYTHING?" SHE ASKED SHARPLY.

Valeria smiled proudly. "The white square in the middle is made out of my little frocks, and each stripe outside of it is a year of clothes."

"And every year the stripes are wider, showing how extravagant you are getting. But don't tell Tom, Dick and Harry all about those stripes, because any fool could figure out how old you be." Aunt Susanna's voice dropped to a secretive hiss.

"Humph! I don't care who knows how old I am," replied Valeria contemptuously.

Mrs. Bird pursed her lips mysteriously. "There ain't a soul in Littleville that knows how old I be," she muttered. "If you want to be stamped as an old maid, Valery, just run around and tell how old you be."

"I want to be an old maid," said Valeria calmly as she placed the walnut center table exactly over the white square in the new carpet. "I'd rather be Valeria Bird and die unmarried than to change my name to any other. Think I'd change my name to Jones or Gibble or Riddle or Smith? Humph!"

Just as Valeria Bird sniffed contemptuously some one rapped smartly at the side door, and Aunt Susanna creaked across the floor to admit a tall, broad shouldered man with thick hair plentifully sprinkled with gray. He was indeed very handsome, and perhaps his good looks found expression in his kindly eyes and firm mouth as well as in the physical beauty of these features. He removed his hat with a friendly smile at Aunt Susanna.

"I'm selling spices, ma'am. Perhaps you would like to give me an order. I bought out William Riddle's business, and I've got a perfectly fresh stock."

"Come right in," said Mrs. Bird cordially. "I've got to go down to the missionary society, but Valery will give you an order. She had it all made out for Billy Riddle. Where's Billy gone?"

"Billy got the gold fever. He's gone out to the Klondike," replied the spice man, wiping his feet carefully on the doormat and then tiptoeing across Valeria's new carpet to a vacant chair. His eyes followed Valeria's disapproving glance to the door, where his shoes had left dusty footprints on three years of her life. "I'm very sorry," he said calmly, taking an order book out of one pocket and a fountain pen from another. He looked expectantly at Valeria, and his eyes lingered on her soft masses of brown hair and her tender blue eyes.

The tender blue eyes changed to steel gray when they encountered the gaze of the spice man, and a flood of color invaded the cool cheeks to her little ears. Valeria Bird had met that same glance in the eyes of many men, but never before had she lost her composure.

Overhead Aunt Susanna's heavy bulk shook the ceiling as she hurried to and fro in her preparation for the missionary society. Outside in the grapevines late robins were feasting on the luscious clusters, and their sweet songs were reminiscent of earlier springs when Valeria had worn pale blue gowns and held her proud little head aloof from all suitors, reserving herself for some ideal being, one who was handsome and gifted and whose name might be "Montfort." "Valeria Montfort" sounded even a little better than Valeria Bird.

"I want some cinnamon and mace," she said at last, "and a bottle of vanilla and some nutmegs."

The spice man closed his book and arose to go. "Thank you, ma'am," he said, with hat in hand. "I'll deliver the goods day after tomorrow. Good afternoon."

"Wait a minute and I'll pay you," said Valeria, leaving the room.

When she returned the spice man was crawling about the floor on his hands and knees, examining the stripes with strange intentness.

"Have you lost something?" she asked.

He scrambled to his feet, looking very much ashamed of himself.

Valeria watched him climb into the shining wagon at the gate, and when it had disappeared in a cloud of dust she turned and looked at the carpet. For what had the spice man been seeking? Save for additional traces of sand on the carpet she could see nothing. Her housewifely soul declaimed against the untidy floor, but she did not brush the sand away.

At ten time Aunt Susanna rustled home from her society meeting. She untied her bonnet strings with impatient fingers as Valeria brought in the teapot.

"I heard all about the new spice man, Valeria," she said breezily. "He's from Comcomupus way, and he's a distant relation of yours too. His mother was own cousin to your mother. He ain't never married. He's always lived on the home place and farmed it till last year his mother died, and he's been looking to buy a good business. He"—

Mrs. Bird hesitated with spoon poised above the sugar basin. Her little dark eyes fell before Valeria's inquiring gaze.

Valeria said nothing.

The next time the spice man called Valeria was alone. When he had set the small packages on the table he said:

"I guess you think I ought to explain what I was looking for that day when you found me on the floor. I was wondering if there was a stripe of pink that had some cloth in it—pink with little white stars on it." He paused and flushed slightly.

Valeria nodded. "There is a piece like that. I used to have a dress like that when I was fourteen years old. All this carpet is made out of my clothes."

Mr. Smith's face was eager and glowing now. "I met you once years ago You was wearing it. I never forgot your face. I was driving a young colt, and you was scared when the colt shied, and you run to the side of the road and dropped a basket of eggs, and"—

"And you got down and picked up the whole eggs and gave me 50 cents I've got the 50 cents now," exclaimed Valeria animatedly. Like an instantaneous photograph she saw the tall, handsome young man who had come to her assistance that long ago day, whose appearance had taken her girlish fancy and had forever after remained her ideal. And in her dreams she had named him "Montfort."

"Why did you keep the 50 cents, Miss Valeria?" asked the spice man curiously.

"I thought your name was Montfort," said Valeria impulsively.

He laughed heartily. "It's just plain John James Smith," he said, with a certain sturdy pride in his tone. "Now, I wonder if you wouldn't just give me a little piece of that pink calico. I want it for something," he added slowly.

Valeria flushed and then knelt down on the floor and sought the pink stripe with the white stars. Recklessly she pulled it out, and the spice man's pocket knife severed a generous sample, which he stowed carefully away in his pocket.

"Shall I come every week?" he asked, pausing in the doorway.

"Yes, do," said Valeria, with a flush.

"For the land's sake! Somebody has tracked fresh mud all over your floor, Valery. This carpet won't last no while if you ain't more careful."

Valeria Bird looked down at the thin pink stripe at her feet. "I don't care," she said, with a dreamy smile.

"For the land"— began Aunt Susanna again; then she looked at Valeria and did not finish the sentence.

Friendship.

They seem to take away the sun from the world who withdraw friendship from life, for we have nothing better from the immortal gods, nothing more delightful.—Cicero.

Not a Suffragist Yet.

During a presidential campaign the question of woman suffrage was much discussed among women pro and con, and at an afternoon tea the conversation turned that way among the women guests.

"Are you a woman suffragist?" asked the one who was most interested.

"Indeed, I am not," replied the other most emphatically.

"Oh, that's too bad! But, just supposing you were, whom would you support in the present campaign?"

"The same man I've always supported, of course," was the apt reply—"my husband."—Ladies' Home Journal.

His Son Andy.

Dr. Andrew J. McCosh was in his college days a famous athlete. He could run faster, kick a football farther and jump higher than any man in Princeton. Publicly his father, President McCosh, took no notice of Andy's achievements. That he privately rejoiced in his son's prowess the students learned in this way:

Jimmy, as the president was familiarly called, though exceedingly courteous, was given to fits of abstraction in which he entirely forgot his surroundings.

Once at a reception in his home, apparently forgetful of all the world, he was pacing up and down the room with head bent and hands interlocked behind his back. Suddenly he walked up before a young lady and asked:

"How tall are ye?"

In an embarrassed way she replied, "Why, doctor, I'm—I'm five feet two inches."

"Me son Andy could jump over yer head," said the doctor and immediately resumed his walk.

A GREAT SINNER.

Even the Good Deacon Weakened on His Chances For Heaven.

Deacon Broadbent, a very honest and pious man, was conducting a religious revival with great success. In a word, his powerful exhortations had brought Calhoun White, the town's worst sinner, weeping to the mourner's bench. The deacon, gratified by this proof of his evangelical prowess, hastened to Calhoun's side.

"Deacon," sobbed Calhoun, "'tain't no use in mah comin' up. I's sinned away de day o' grace."

"No, yo' hain't, Brudder Cal," said the deacon. "All yo' got to do is to gib up sin an' all will be forgibhen."

"I's done gib it up, deacon, but dar hain't no salvation fo' me."

"Yes, dey is, hon. Dey hain't no sin so black but it kin be washed whiter 'n de snow."

"But I done stole fo' young turkeys last week," said the penitent.

"Dat's all forgibhen, Cal."

"An' free de week befo'."

"Dat's forgibhen too."

"An' six fat geese"—

The deacon suddenly frowned and stiffened, while the penitent sinner continued:

—"six fat geese outer yore own yard, deacon—dem fat geese wot you' 'lowed to set so much store by."

The deacon rose.

"I reckon, Calhoun," he said slowly, "I reckon I's spoken too hasty. Dis case o' yourn needs advisement. I ain't sho' dat we's justified in cinterin' up de kingdom o' heben wid chicken thieves."

Didn't Mean That.

"These," said the lecturer, indicating them with his pointer, "are the marble bath houses. Thousands of people congregate here during the summer season. Over here on the left is the hotel at which I stopped, and an exceedingly homelike place it is. I shall give you a nearer view of it presently. Although I was there a week or two and would gladly have remained longer if I could have spared the time, I did not take any baths for the reason"—

[Loud and prolonged laughter.]

"I meant, ladies and gentlemen," he resumed after the merriment had subsided, "that I didn't take any baths down at the beach. This audience is altogether too smart."—Baltimore American.

"Do you want to see me again, doctor?"

"I don't want to, but it's business."

The Case of B. E. Wise

His deals were larger and involved more money and brains than most men dared to invest.

Wise's wisdom lacked in but one particular—he failed to consider Nature's laws of compensation. The result—Wise gave out. Some said "Old Wise is all in." They were wrong.

Wise's physician said "DIGESTO for those wasted tissues and jaded brain cells."

Wise was soon back in the game—he now has snap and energy to spare.

DIGESTO is a fixture with him.

He Stopped It

By CHAUNCEY WARDWELL

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The king of Prussia—the great King Frederick—was one day walking in his garden with his hands clasped behind him when he heard an "Ahem!" spoken in a soft voice.

Looking up, he saw just above the wall a face. It was a young, round, rosy face incased in curly chestnut locks and visible from chin to crown. But below the chin was only a stone wall. The body was invisible.

"Pardon me, your majesty," said a girl's voice. "I have something to ask your majesty, and if I had taken the proper steps it would be too late to serve the purpose."

"What is it, child?" asked the king.

"I have heard that your majesty is greatly opposed to the practice of dueling, so much in vogue just now."

"Surely you do not wish permission to kill any one."

"Oh, no, your majesty! I wish you to stop a duel."

"Between whom?"

"Captain Fritz Guenther and Lieutenant Carl Hoffman."

"What interest have you in these men?"

"No interest whatever in Captain Guenther. He is a professed duelist. He picked a quarrel with Carl on my account. Guenther is a fine swordsman and would doubtless kill Carl."

"H'm!" grunted the king, noticing a tremor in the girl's voice. "This Hoffman is doubtless either your brother or your lover."

"He is not my brother," said the girl, blushing.

"I see. Well, I shall send word to them both that they cannot fight without my permission."

The girl's head disappeared, and the king went into the palace. There he directed that a royal order be sent to the duelists that they should not fight without his permission, for which they must apply in person.

That evening it was announced to the king that Captain Guenther and Lieutenant Hoffman asked for an audience. The king directed that they be admitted.

"Well, young men," he said when they came before him, "what can I do for you?"

"Please, your majesty," said Captain Guenther, "we wish to fight a duel."

"And do you join in the application?" asked the king of Hoffman.

"I do, sire."

"Very well. The application is granted on two conditions—I must choose the ground and be present at the encounter."

"So high an honor I surely did not expect," said Captain Guenther, much elated.

"Nor I," said Lieutenant Hoffman.

"Will your majesty graciously appoint the hour of meeting?" asked the captain.

"Ten o'clock tomorrow morning," replied the king.

"And the place?" asked the lieutenant.

"In the square directly in the rear of the palace."

The duelists thought such a place very public, especially at an hour when many people would be passing, but neither dared object. So they went away, Captain Guenther delighted that he was to fight in the presence of his king and Lieutenant Hoffman quite sure that his opponent would take all the more pleasure at killing him in the presence of so august a witness.

The next morning the regiment, acting as the king's bodyguard, surrounded the open square in the rear of the palace, where the meeting was to take place. A few minutes before 10 o'clock two carriages drove up to the square, each containing one of the principals and his seconds. An officer informed them that they could not enter the square until after the arrival of the king, so they waited in the carriages. Presently the king, who had been inspecting since early morning, rode up to the square on horseback. The troops made an opening for him, and, returning their salute, he rode on to the dueling ground.

When a few minutes later the duelists were admitted the first thing that attracted their attention was a gallows in the center of the square, behind which sat their sovereign on his horse. They were puzzled. When they came near to the king both uncovered, and Guenther asked:

"May it please your majesty to tell us what this means?"

"It means," said the king grimly, "that the man who survives will be hanged as high as Haman on that gibbet."

It was not only evident that the king was not favorably disposed toward dueling, but that he would keep his word in the present instance. The two officers retired and spoke to their seconds while the king waited. Immediately the seconds went to his majesty and informed him that the two officers would not think of doing that which their sovereign disapproved. Then the king rode away.

Frederick directed that the name and residence of the girl who had spoken to him over his wall he learned and sent her a letter thanking her for giving him an opportunity to read a lesson to his army. She was soon after married to Lieutenant Hoffman, and the king not only sent her a substantial wedding present, but attended the wedding in person.

After that dueling in Frederick's dominions was rarely practiced and then only with the utmost secrecy.

MUCH TALKED ABOUT INVESTIGATION IS ON

Officials are Examining County Records and Wittnesses Today

Investigation Has Aroused Little Interest and Few Attend Hearing.

The investigation of charges against Auditor A. A. Latendresse and P. A. Lindquist, chairman of the county board, was conducted at the court house yesterday and today. The investigation started at 11 o'clock yesterday. Peter Matson of Ada, judge of probate of Norman county, is officiating as referee. The attorney general's office was represented by Lyndon A. Smith of Montevideo, assistant attorney general and former lieutenant governor. The accused officials were represented by Chas. E. Boughton and F. A. Grady of this city. W. O. Braggans of Warren, the court reporter, took the testimony in shorthand.

The principal witness was Col. [illegible], deputy public examiner, who made an examination of the county's records last October.

The investigation was a very informal affair, the attorney for the state and the attorneys for the officials having expressed the desire that the matter in the county's records and the testimony having any bearing on the charges be made a part of the evidence to go to the governor.

Nothing has developed that would seem to be any grounds for the removal of either of the officials. The proceedings were almost void of interest and few people attended, even the Thief River people who brought the charges were not represented at the hearing.

It is [illegible] that the charges are [illegible] and were brought [illegible] and may move in the light [illegible] decision.

The investigation closed this afternoon [illegible] at the hour of going to press. The testimony is simply a [illegible] of what has been published many times.

DAN CAMPBELL SHOT

Mixed it With a Bartender at Blackduck.

Dan Campbell, well known here, got a bullet in his arm last week. It is reported that Campbell got in a mix-up with a bartender in a Blackduck saloon and the barkeep used a gun. The bullet struck Campbell in the shoulder and came out near the elbow. The wound is not a dangerous one.

MRS. J. A. NICHOLSON.

Passed Away Friday Morning After Brief Illness.

Mrs. Nicholson, wife of J. A. Nicholson, passed away at her home in this city last Friday morning at 3:30 o'clock after an illness of less than one week from pneumonia.

The death of Mrs. Nicholson seems most untimely for she was only forty-one years of age and she has left a home in which there are five young children. Mrs. Nicholson, whose maiden name was Clarissa Manson, was born in Renfrew, Ontario, May 26, 1868. In 1892 she came west with her sister and they resided in Grand Forks in which city she and Mr. Nicholson were married in 1895. The children who mourn the death of their mother are Alvin, Olive, Vera, Kenneth and Donald.

Funeral services were conducted at the Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Nicholson had long been a member, at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. There being no resident pastor, Rev. Akers of Crookston conducted the service. A large number of friends were present to pay a last tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased. The Royal Neighbors lodge, of which deceased was a member, attended in a body, and members of the order acted as honorary pall bearers.

It is indeed a sad affliction that has come to Mr. Nicholson and he has the sincere sympathy of the people of the community.

BIG CONGRESS IS A GREAT SUCCESS

Conservation Meeting at St Paul Awakens Statewide Interest in Important Subjects

Resolutions Adopted Deal With Many Very Important Matters.

Conservation has been adopted as a permanent policy for Minnesota's future—conservation in a definite, progressive sense—as a result of the first Minnesota Conservation and Agricultural Development congress, which was in session four days in the St. Paul Auditorium. The meeting set a standard for future legislation and state policy. It crystallized ideas for progress in many lines. It awakened interest anew in farm and industrial education. It pledged the state as a whole to a good roads campaign, to more liberal treatment of state lands and to rational apportionment of legislative districts.

This result was taken part in by 3,038 delegates who registered with the secretary and by several hundred more who overlooked that formality.

There were sixteen meetings in the Auditorium, each addressed by specialists and by big men with messages to give.

The delegates, who represented every county in the state, gave much attention to the exhibit features collected, which also had their educational value. They formed a permanent organization. County conservation clubs will be organized, with printed volumes of the congress proceedings to guide their work and a second state meeting will be held next winter in Minneapolis.

EBERHART WELL PLEASED.

Governor A. O. Eberhart, who issued the call for the congress and rapped for order on the opening day, is elated over the success of the gathering.

"This is only a starter," he said. "The various counties are to be organized for the movement, in county conservation clubs, by our vice-presidents and committeemen. Between now and next year the ideas given us by experts in each line will be absorbed and used by local organizations. The delegates to the next congress will come well informed and ready for another step in progress.

"It will be proper for the subjects passed upon at this congress to be called to the attention of the next legislature in the governor's message. The next congress will probably convene while the next legislature is meeting and can endorse the ideas still further. Recommendations coming from such a large body of representative citizens are bound to have great weight.

"I must emphasize that this is a non-partisan movement, with no clique of men using it to grind their axes. When it came to appointing delegates I used names given by the county auditors, who were asked to find two good men in each township who would be likely to attend. I also named delegates on recommendation of local commercial clubs. Politics did not enter into the meeting in any way and that is one reason there has been such a fine spirit of co-operation and unanimity. That is one thing we have been needing in Minnesota, to find ourselves and each other, and to work more in unison for results."

OPENED BY THE GOVERNOR.

Governor Eberhart called the first session of the congress to order and introduced Archbishop Ireland as the presiding officer. The archbishop's address was devoted largely to Minnesota's richness in natural resources and in a plea for their conservation. The balance of the first day's morning session was occupied in the appointment of committees and transaction of the business of organization.

The features of the afternoon session were addresses by Governor Eberhart, as president of the congress; Richard A. Ballinger, secretary of the Interior, and Professor Albert Woods, dean of the State Agricultural college. A special session on "Farm Conservation Problems," with Senator S. D Works presiding, was held at 4 in the afternoon and in the evening P. V Collins of Minneapolis presided, while the speakers were Mrs. Margaret J Blair, instructor in domestic science at the State Agricultural college; Max Toltz, consulting engineer of the Great Northern railroad, who told of the richness of Minnesota's peat deposits; Professor Frederick E. Clements of the state university and George Otis Smith, director of the United States geological survey. [illegible] Smith used a [illegible] dress to illustrate the "People's Part in Conservation."

BALLINGER'S ADDRESS.

Secretary of the Interior Ballinger's address was entitled "The Public Domain and the National Obligations Regarding Its Disposition." It was, in effect, a declaration of his ideas on conservation generally. While he did not mention Gifford Pinchot by name his frequent allusions to conservation doctrinaires" and their "nebulous theories" were not easily misunderstood. He admitted that "these people" are for the most part sincere, but thought their sincerity gave them a "vigor of imagination" that makes it hard to combat their vagaries except through practical demonstration.

Mr. Ballinger made the point that the responsibility for the conservation of natural resources rests chiefly upon the states themselves, though the general government has a great duty to perform by way of assistance in the work.

Mr. Ballinger drew applause on several occasions, as, when he said: "To put as many homes as possible into the hands of the people is the earnest desire and sole object of the administration."

A special session in the afternoon was devoted to live stock and dairy interests and was considered one of the most important sessions of the convention.

C. W. Clotfelter, a banker and cattleman of Waterville, gave many interesting and instructive pointers on the cattle and sheep industries.

HILL DRAWS BIG CROWD.

The second day of the congress was more largely attended than the first, while in the exhibit rooms scores of visitors inspected the displays. Not a small part of the crowd attended especially to hear James J. Hill, who has for years been preaching the doctrine of conservation, rotation of crops, scientific farming and economy in production and who has demonstrated the soundness of his theories by putting them into practical use at his farm.

President Howard Elliott of the Northern Pacific railroad was in the chair at the morning session and President Cyrus Northrop of the state university at the afternoon session. The general subject of the morning session was "The Agricultural Development of the State of Minnesota." Professor E. V. Robinson of the University of Minnesota was the first speaker on "Minnesota's Farm and Soil Resources," and Mr. Hill followed him on "Minnesota's Agricultural Opportunities." The closing address of the morning session was by Professor A. E. Chamberlain, superintendent of the Farmers' institute, Brookings, S. D., and Professor A. D. Wilson holding the same position in Minnesota, spoke for this side of the state line in the afternoon.

At a special session of the congress at 4 o'clock in the afternoon "The Live Stock and Dairy Interests of Minnesota" was the general topic of a number of papers by various authorities on the subject. The evening session was devoted to "State Advertising and Settlement of Farm Lands."

The committee on permanent organization made its report, recommending that the congress be made a permanent affair and the report was adopted, the present officers to retain their positions during the ensuing year.

POINTS MADE BY J. J. HILL.

In his address to the congress James J. Hill recalled the fact that four years ago, in a speech at the Minnesota state fair, he called attention to the waste of national resources, inviting national disaster, and he reiterated what he said at that time. He made these points:

"We are living in an age of worldwide financial delirium. Most nations have thrown away moderation in the spending of money.

"Our national debt now tends to rise, concealed under the polite fiction of certificates of indebtedness to cover treasury deficits.

"The total debts of the states, including minor civil divisions, increased between 1890 and 1902 $727,778,393, or 64 per cent.

"The net ordinary expenditures of the national government have increased since 1890 by $180,000,000 each nine years on the average, or $20,000,000 a year, until now they are 121 per cent more than they were eighteen years ago.

"The total expenditure of state governments was $77,105,911 in 1890 and $185,764,203 in 1902. The increase in these twelve years was 141 per cent."

The increase in the cost of living is charged by Mr. Hill to several causes, among them higher taxes, currency inflation, the tariff, combinations in restraint of trade, the decline in agricultural produce and a general tendency to extravagance and luxury. Continuing, Mr. Hill said:

"We must save the wealth of the country, its capital, its credit, from the predatory poor as well as the predatory rich, but, above all, from the predatory politicians.

"Expenditures must be cut down all along the line.

"Credit everywhere should be conserved by a sharp scrutiny of new bond issues.

"Stop grafting, the offspring of public extravagance and the parent of civic decay."

D. M. Neill, president of the Minnesota Federation of Commercial Clubs, delivered one of the best addresses of the congress. He spoke on "The Eve of a Statewide Development Movement." His message was one of promise and hope for Minnesota and her people.

Proceedings of the meetings held on the third and fourth days of the Congress will be published in the next issue of the Gazette. Before adjournment the Congress adopted the following resolutions:

Be it Resolved, That this congress recommend and respectfully urge that a reapportionment be made at the coming session of the legislature that shall give to all parts of the state equal representation both in the senate and the house, according to the population as shown by the United States census of 1910.

Whereas, The present great interest in Minnesota farm lands is largely due to the work of the Minnesota immigration board, and

Whereas, This board is at present the chief distribution agency for the dissemination of information about these lands,

Be it Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the powers of this board be greatly enlarged and a sum of not less than $100,000 annually be placed at its disposal that may enable them to compete with private and other public distributing agencies in seeking for actual settlers to populate Minnesota's idle acres.

Resolved, That we recommend the legislature be most liberal in its appropriation for the department of agriculture of the University of Minnesota. That special aid and encouragement be given to extension work, plant breeding, soils, dairying and live stock investigation; and that the state should duplicate the financial support now extended by the federal government for this important work, and be it further

Resolved, That we commend the board of regents for their labors in the cause of agriculture in the past and urge upon them a continuance of the agricultural work so necessary for the development of this commonwealth.

HIGHER TAX FOR GOOD ROADS.

Resolved, That this congress recommends that a one-fourth mill tax be levied for good roads and bridges at the next session of the legislature as the constitution now provides and that constitutional provision be made for the levying hereafter of a one mill tax for the same purpose—the same to be expended under the direction of the highway commission.

Believing that one of the important factors of the agricultural development of our state is the proper education of our farm boys and girls for farm life, and believing also that the policy of the state should be to offer as much elementary education as possible to the farm boys and girls in their home schools; that fully appreciating the magnificent urban, graded and high schools which have been built up in the state of Minnesota under the direction and guidance of the high school board and by the liberal appropriations granted by the state legislature, and realizing that the proper education of our rural children is of as much importance to the

IT WAS A VERY SUCCESSFUL MEETING

About Two Hundred School Officers in the City Tuesday.

Fine Program for the Annual Meeting of School officers of County.

The annual meeting of the school officers of Red Lake county held at the high school building Tuesday was a very successful affair. About two hundred school officers were present at the meeting and they were enthusiastic in their praises of the excellent program arranged by Supt. H. F. Anderson.

S. M. Sivertson and Dr. N. M. Watson of the local board of education gave short addresses and spoke of the work in which country and city school officers are mutually interested and made some excellent suggestions for co-operation in educational work.

The advantages of industrial and agricultural education, which are to receive special attention in the public schools in the future, were thoroughly discussed. Mr. Frasier, assistant state superintendent, and George F. Howard, engaged in agricultural extension work at the State University and a pioneer in industrial and agricultural work, gave excellent addresses of practical value and containing many suggestions for better work.

The school officers present were very enthusiastic over the success of the meeting and a number of them took occasion to say to a Gazette representative that they were well repaid for attending the meeting.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAM.

For Rural Carriers to be Held Saturday Morning.

Civil service examination to be written by applicants for appointment as rural mail carriers will be held in Red Lake Falls Saturday morning, March 26. The examination will be held at the high school building and applicants should report at 9:30 o'clock. The examinations will commence at 10 o'clock.

Rudolph Holzman wore a straw hat Wednesday. And the next day it snowed.

TO THE FARMER

When you think of buying a piece of Machinery, Vehicle or any implement used on the farm, think of us and the large stock we carry. Yes, take down your large catalogue of Sears, Roebuck & Co., Galloway, M. & W., or others who picture out to you that they are worth millions of dollars, are your dear friends, etc., etc. But before you send in your orders and money, first see what you can do with the same amount of money at home. I buy goods in carload lots, take cash discounts, and every one in my office works and wears overalls. Now why can't I sell you good goods at reasonable prices? Come in and let us talk it over and see if we can make a deal. I don't like the signs "Closing Out Sale" or "Going Out of Business." Give us merchants a chance to live and we'll help you increase the value of your farm and build up a decent town. We have an ax to grind, that's true, but we give you good value for your money, we help you make roads, build schools and churches, and if anything goes wrong with the goods you buy, we are here to make it right. What does the catalogue house do for you? Think this over and when you need something, come in and try to buy it at home. There is time enough after you've seen the stock and got prices to send away if we can't satisfy you, but the small amount of profit you pay your home merchant will be a benefit to all. Give me a chance and I'll convince you that I am right.

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

$1.50 Per Year in Advance

Governor Eberhart has designated April 29 as arbor and bird day.

We are willing to take back all all the unkind things we ever made at March weather.

Secretary Ballinger seems to have discovered that his conservation ideas are not endorsed in Minnesota.

J. Adam Bede, in an interview in the St Paul Dispatch, expresses his belief that Governor Eberhart will be renominated, but the election may tell a different story.

Senator Burrows of Michigan says he is proud of the new tariff law. As there is a senatorial election on soon, the Minneapolis Journal thinks Mr. Burrows is testing the pulse with his thumb.

Recent developments at Washington seem to bear out Frank Day's contention that only two of the Minnesota Congressmen—Davis and Lindbergh—are real insurgents. The balance of the bunch voted for Cannon again.

The Democrats are getting into the game early this year by arranging for a Jefferson banquet at St. Paul on April 13. It is to be a "dollar dinner" and Governor Lind and Congressman Hammond will make the principal addresses.

Banking figures for Minnesota towns about the size of Red Lake Falls show that ours is about the liveliest in the bunch. There's an inspiration for you. A town with over half a million of bank resources is a silent and impressive lesson in wealth and thrift.

The Cannon rules committee was overthrown last Saturday, the Democrats voting solidly to eliminate it and they were joined by the thirty-five insurgent Republicans. After the defeat of the rules committee a motion was made to declare the speaker's chair vacant, but on this vote only nine Republicans joined the Democrats and the discredited speaker was given an added vote of confidence. Some of the Minnesota Congressmen who voted for Cannon will probably be obliged to reckon with their constituents next November.

The investigation being made by the officers and attorneys of fraternal insurance societies does not menace the financial standing of any of these organizations," says State insurance Commissioner J. A. Hartigan. "I make this statement," he continued "because erroneous impressions are circulating which may work harm where they should not."

President Taft's refusal to intervene in the Philadelphia street car strike, on the allegation that the trouble is merely local in its character, is just another example of the chief executive's tendency to dodge unpleasant tasks, says the Winona Independent. The gentleman who preceded him would have justified action on the theory that if it were local trouble now, it would become national if allowed to continue. T. R. never passed up any chance for a scrap.

No one is inclined to take away from Governor Eberhart the credit for making the conservation congress a success, nor disposed to charge that the meeting pandered to politics. It is passing strange though, that in the list of thirty or forty men appointed on the various committees not a Democrat, Populist or prohibitionist is to be found. The governor likely is not responsible but some of his fool friends must play politics in a manner that is far from politic. Such unnecessary slight of more than half the voters of the state is not calculated to allay suspicion in the minds of the incredulous.

From the Minneapolis Tribune we clip the following item which partially explains why Minnesota is coming to the front so rapidly:—"Minnesota soil is the best in the world, the result of decomposition of rock waste which imparts excellent chemical consistancy. Underlaid with a bed of clay, close to the surface, it has incomparable fertility and strong producing power, all the elements of plant foods, minerals and otherwise being found in it. At least 90 per cent of Minnesota soil is arable. The soil lends itself to a greater diversity of crops than that of any other state. It is capable of and does, produce heavier yields, in a shorter period of a more superior quality of seeds, crops and potatoes than the soil of any other section of the country. Statistics show this to be true."

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Fairmont Sentinel: Minnesota is one of the very few states that give the people a 2-cent railroad fare. This is one of Gov. Johnson's deeds that saves the traveling public tens of thousands of dollars daily.

Albert Lea Tribune: Much is said about the rights of company and strikers on the Philadelphia strike. What about the rights of the public which has given valuable franchises in order to get certain dependable conveniences?

St. Cloud Times: Here is one on the surgeons. A Georgia court has decided in the case of a child who died after a surgical operation that the surgeon is entitled to no fee, since no benefit was derived from his services. If this theory was carried out generally in practice no doctor could collect a bill for attendance upon a patient who died—and they all die sometime.

Red Wing Republican: An Ohio preacher says newspapers should be just as accurate as the Bible. Many of them aim to be, but it must be remembered that the ancient writers who wrote the sacred pages didn't have to get their copy in every day at a certain time. They had ten years or fifty years as the case might be in which to revise and correct proof.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

New York Press: There is no education so expensive as experience.

People miss a lot of fun in life by despising it because it's not expensive.

If a man can't find any other way to be a hero, he will escape having pneumonia.

A college boy can't even learn how to write a letter home for anything but money.

The trouble with domestic economies is that for every dollar anybody in the family can save, somebody else can spend two.

Pointed Paragraphs.

Chicago News: Cheerfulness irritates a pessimist.

Lend a man money and he will return for more.

And many a fair woman has taken a man by storm.

You can't please yourself and your neighbors simultaneously.

A politician isn't necessarily straight because he refuses to unbend.

People with the telephone habit make a busy man tired.

It isn't always those with weak eyes who look on the dark side of life.

Some men would rather make a dishonest quarter, than earn an honest dollar.

The after effect is the worst thing about getting drunk—likewise, also, about getting married.

A girl likes to have someone to make her blush, just to convince people that her complexion is the real thing.

The average woman can bluff almost any man, but when it comes to bluffing some other woman—well, that's another story.

CONSERVATION CONVERSATION

Politics Was Not Much in Evidence at the Governor's Big Meeting.

The Mines, Roads and Schools Furnish Material for Much Discussion.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, March 22. There was nothing heard in St. Paul last week but Conservation. The word was in everybody's mouth. The Conservation Convention was the burden of constant conversation. Even among the politicians, politics for once had to take a back seat, except that incidental politics which conservation conversation gave birth to, and that was some. For the governor is very properly given credit for the convention. He deserves it. The delegates were of his nomination. He is given credit also for having outlined its program and for inducing the distinguished speakers who took part to attend, which he no doubt did. The convention both in point of attendance and in point of interest was a complete success. The governor is given credit for that, too. The success of the convention works for the governor's nomination, which it should. And that's about the only place politics comes in on the deal, if we except some of the politics played by the candidates who made it a point to conspicuously display the political lightning rods which they have recently set up.

A Graphic Demonstration.

There were some things about the convention—I wish I had the space to tell the whole story of it, for it is something everyone should familiarize himself with—which were particularly striking and it is to a very few of them that I intend briefly to refer. One—to my mind the most impressive—was the exhibit from the Iron region. There were the ores heavily impregnated with the most useful of all metals—all kinds of them—of all varieties and in many colors. There was the ochre found in association with iron. There was the diamond drill which plays so important a part in the mining and exploration. There was the surface mine model, showing graphically the mining method used on the range. There were the photographs of the mines and of the docks and the model of a mining shaft—the largest in the world. The ore samples were contained in small boxes and with them was a card indicating the percentage of iron, etc., and the mine from which it was taken. The names of these mines alone would fill a column of this paper. Accompanying the exhibits was a pamphlet on "Iron Ore in Minnesota," in which among other things it is stated that the iron ore production of Minnesota up to the present time has been 254,825,000 tons. This is merely the scratching of the surface.

The State's Lavish Donation.

One is impressed by this quite extraordinary exhibit with the wealth it represents. That can only be talked about in figures the mind is incapable of fully grasping. It was an eminently proper exhibit for a conservation congress. It was a striking subject lesson to look upon—these evidences of the fabulous value of the state's mineral resources, which the state is not conserving—has not conserved. It was a graphic presentation of the boundless wealth a prodigal state is pouring into the lap of the United States steel octopus. That was what struck me about it—of how small advantage it is to the people of Minnesota—of what little benefit it is to the people of the United States—that nature has been so lavish in this great gift.

Crumbs From the Rich Man's Table.

It was called to public attention in connection with this remarkable display that the state owns in fee simply a number of the mineral properties which are being operated by the mining companies. And it has been put down as if it were a matter on which the state should congratulate itself that Minnesota is receiving for the ore from the lands it owns in fee simple which are among the richest on the iron range and which, in the ground, are certainly worth not less than a dollar a ton, a royalty of 25 cents a ton! There are those who boast that from the 225,000,000 tons of ore shipped out of the state, worth to the United States Steel corporation at the pit's mouth not less than $700,000,000 the state has got some $10,000,000; and that from an estimated 1,500,000,000 tons of iron ore which is still to be mined the state may ultimately receive $100,000,000—scarcely more than the value of the product of a single mine. I may be peculiar in this matter, but I am free to confess that I am utterly unable to find matter for congratulation that the state should have bartered a birthright whose value is so inestimable for such a mess of pottage.

Good Roads.

Another impressive demonstration at the Conservation convention was that made by the good roads people. I am glad to say too that it was the one in which the greatest interest was taken. For no subject—and very properly so—appeals more strongly to the people of the state than that of good roads. If the bicycle and automobile had served no other purpose than to help awaken this interest they would have filled a most useful mission. At the demonstration it was shown how to make good roads and how not to make one. It was shown how it should be shaped; how it should be drained; how it should be surfaced. Graphic illustrations were given of how to make a good road out of common dirt; a better one of gravel; the best of macadam. This demonstration was talked of and studied, and, I haven't any doubt, will serve a very useful purpose in the instruction of those whose duty it is to build county roads.

The Newer Education.

There is still another demonstration which impressed me, and perhaps it was the most important of all, for it pointed the way to the newer education. We are going to teach different things in our public schools one of these days. Here and there a commencement has already been made. When I went to school things were brought home to us boys by giving us examples in terms of things with which we were familiar. Thus a lesson in fractions was illustrated by speaking of dividing an apple, and so on all thru the piece. It was words however with which our teacher dealt. Now it is to be the thing itself. Our children are to have their illustrations in the concrete. They are to be taught not merely the theory, but the theory by the practice. It's a movement of extraordinary significance that is going on—this training of the mind by the application of the mind and the hand to common things. It isn't merely that boys and girls are to be taught in school how to tell a good from a bad milch cow; what sort of a hog it is most profitable to raise; to know whether a horse has spavin or ringbone; how to choose seed; to turn a furrow; to drive a nail; to plain a board; to sew a seam; to fashion a garmet; to make embroidery; to knit; to bake and to cook. These indeed are useful and highly important things to know. But the valuable thing we have got hold of is that it isn't necessary to go to the dead languages or to the higher mathematics to train the mind. The useful thing that schooling does for us is not to give us facts; it is that through it we are taught to use our heads—it is the mind-training that counts. Education gives us control of our brains and enables us to make of them a useful servant. The new education is based upon the fact that the best way to train the mind is to train it in connection with the hand and to bring it to bear on the things which are a part of our everyday life. A boy's mind can be as certainly developed by the study of an ear of corn or a grain of wheat as it can by the study of a Greek or Latin root. Moreover if a boy once gets a cob of corn which he holds in his hand to give up to him its secrets, he will never forget them. The Greek root he is lucky if he remembers over night.

Adding Dignity to Farming.

There is another thing—the application of education to common things enables them. Education glorifies what it touches. A man is all the better farmer even if he does not apply his knowledge if he is familiar with the study of botany. If by the knowlege of the composition of soils, by knowing how to select his seed, how to drain his land, how to cultivate it and when and where to plant, he can make two plant blades grow where one grew before he not only enriches himself but becomes a public benefactor and has the consciousness of adding to the greatness of his country and to the sum of its productivity. To teach agriculture and manual training in the schools will popularize agriculture and mechanical pursuits. The time is coming when the bright boys will not be looking for a place in a store or in an office. That will be left for the chaps who don't know enough to make the farm pay, one of the speakers said at one of the sessions. While that may not be altogether true, for everyone will naturally drift to the vocation to which he is best suited, it is certainly true that the newer education is sure to add greatly to the attractiveness of life on the farm.

The Putnam Law.

In this connection it is plain that so much is hoped from the experiment in legislation tried at the last session of providing for agricultural education in the high schools of this state. In my own opinion we should begin lower down, for after all it is but a small proportion of our boys and girls who reach the high school; and I am inclined to think that the consolidated rural school is the true solution of the education problem. Nevertheless it's a good thing to start anywhere, and there is no doubt at all that the agricultural high school is proving a great success. One of the speakers from Washington, an expert from the agricultural department, spoke of the Putnam high school education law in terms of the highest praise.

Where License Carries.

One thing I intend to direct attention to in this letter which the Twin City papers appear, for reasons best known to themselves, to have ignored, is a most important opinion recently given by George W. Peterson, assistant attorney general. It is to the effect that a license election, in order that license may be granted, the vote for licence must be a majority of all votes cast—not on license merely—but a clear majority of all votes cast at the election. Thus Osakis went dry, in spite of the fact that 130 votes were for license and 120 against, because the 130 votes was not a majority of all votes cast for village officers. It happened to be just half the vote and that raises the other question decided by Mr. Peterson, namely, that in case the vote is a tie the village goes dry. License in order to carry must have a clear majority.

The Wrong Jake.

It was announced recently by one of the Twin City papers that Mr. Jacobson had gone back on Mr. Gordon, the only candidate for lieutenant governor who takes a decided stand in favor of temperance legislation, and had announced that he would support Dr. Cole. That was true but it wasn't our "Jake." The Mr. Jacobson who talked that way was O. B. Jacobson of Fergus Falls, a fellow townsman of Dr. Cole. J. F. Jacobson is in the county option fight to stick.

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Rheumatism is a specific blood fermentation, a souring of the circulation from an excess of uric acid accumulating in the blood stream. This uratic impurity comes usually as a result of constipation, weak kidneys, indigestion and stomach disturbances. These systemic irregularities may not be of marked severity or of long duration, but each has a direct effect on the eliminative members of the body, which prevents the proper removal of the waste products. This refuse remains in the stomach and bowels, and souring forms uric acid, which the blood quickly absorbs.

Rheumatism is usually manifested in the joints and muscles. It is here its sharpest twinges of pain are felt, and stiffening of ligaments and tendons first commence. The pain of Rheumatism is caused by the contact of the sensory nerves with the gritty, acrid formation which uric acid causes to accumulate in the corpuscles of the blood about the joints. The stiffening of muscles and joints is usually gradual. Constantly the blood deposits the uric acid into the joints, and slowly the natural fluids are dried up and destroyed. Then Rheumatism becomes chronic and serious. Rheumatism is sometimes inherited, for like all blood diseases it can be transmitted to offspring. This explains why some persons are afflicted with the disease, and suffer its pains, who have otherwise been perfectly healthy.

RHEUMATISM FORTY YEARS.

I suffered with lumbago for a long time, and speaking of it to a friend one day he told me to try S. S. S. I did so, and soon found it was helping me. I had rheumatism for more than forty years, having contracted it in the army, but S. S. S cured me sound and well, and have had no return of the trouble. I think S.S.S. has no equal for curing rheumatism.

THOS. POTTS.
111 Main St., Johnston City., Pa.

S.S.S. cures Rheumatism and cures it permanently. It goes into the circulation, and removes the uric acid, purifies the blood, and in this way destroys the cause. S. S. S. changes the blood from a sour, acid-steeped stream to a rich, healthy fluid, which quiets the excited nerves, eases the throbbing muscles and painful joints, and filters out of the circulation the irritating matter which causes every painful symptom of the disease. When the blood has been purified and enriched by S.S.S., it nourishes the different members that have been weakened and starved because of imperfect blood. RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED welfare of the state as the education of its urban children, and further recognizing that the present system of rural schools offers to the rural children educational advantages greatly inferior to those now offered to our villages and cities,

Be it Resolved, That the state of Minnesota should, proceeding along similar lines to those by which it has built up its excellent system of urban, graded and high schools, build up a system of rural, township and graded schools which shall fully meet the needs of our rural population and shall insure to them in their home schools as much instruction in elementary agriculture, manual training and home economics as it is possible to give, that such a system of rural and graded schools can and will be established in the near future.

Be it further Resolved, That we recommend that the secondary agricultural schools now established be strengthened and that additional schools be built from time to time as conditions demand.

CHANGES IN LAND LAWS.

Whereas, Minnesota is a region of fruitful soil, splendid waterways and water powers, boundless wealth producing resources and healthful climate, and it is the veritable parlor of nature's palace, and

Whereas, The said state of Minnesota is possessed of large and extensive areas of land secured under special grants from the federal government, and said lands as now handled constitute a continuing barrier against the full settlement and development of Minnesota by landlocking the settlers in some sections, making the building of roads impossible, and hence retarding the agricultural development of the state,

Therefore, be it Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that speedy, adequate relief be afforded by the next legislature looking to the correction of these evils. That laws be passed imposing a tax on all state lands not used exclusively for public purposes, to the end that these vast areas of state lands in Minnesota may pay their just proportion of the tax necessary for the building of roads, schools and public buildings. That an amendment to the constitution of the state be submitted to the people amending article 8 thereof, so as to permit the enactment of a better and more businesslike method of disposing of state lands, having in view the proper protection of the permanent school fund of the state.

There having been a lack of moneys from time to time in the funds from which loans are made by the state board of investment,

Be it Resolved, That it is the wish and will of this congress that Minnesota, through its board of investment, dispose of, at the earliest possible opportunity, enough of the bonds of other states held by this state necessary to secure and loan to our own towns and counties the money essential to state development, and especially for roads, drainage and schools.

STATE DRAINAGE.

Whereas, During the last few years drainage projects of enormous magnitude have been projected whereby vast areas of wet and low lands have been reclaimed and transformed into some of the richest and most fertile farm lands in the state of Minnesota,

Resolved, That we are heartily in accord with the drainage movement commenced by the different counties, the state drainage commission and the United States government and we recommend that all Minnesota counties do all in their power to further the cause of drainage; that the federal government be urged to reclaim the millions of acres held by them in trust for the Chippewa Indians; and, further, that the state legislature submit a constitutional amendment to the end that appropriation of funds can be made for the straightening and deepening of the rivers and channels which are the natural outlets of our drainage projects, and to generally assist in this important work.

Resolved, That this congress recommends that our state legislature, as early as possible, pass a law providing for a board or commission to have charge of or aid in waterways improvements, the development and control of water-powers and the use of water for domestic purposes; for irrigation, for developing power for commercial purposes, or in all ways that water may be used in our state.

TO PRINT PROCEEDINGS.

Whereas, The results and accrued benefits of the Minnesota Conservation and Agricultural Development congress depend very largely upon a wide publicity and general knowledge of the facts brought forth in the various sessions,

Be it Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting, and the opinion of the delegates here present, that all addresses given and all discussions brought forth be put into some permanent form, so that it may be widely disseminated among Minnesota people and all others interested in the welfare of this state and that a committee of five be appointed to to that end.

Be it Resolved, That measures be taken to empower some one of our state boards to secure accurate and exact statistics of Minnesota crop and farm production so that these facts may be compiled in pamphlet form and published annually.

Whereas, The value of soil survey would be of inestimable value to the people of this state,

Be it Resolved, That the federal geological survey department be urged by this congress to take steps to procure this information that Minnesota may have the advantages of a thoroughly authentic soil survey such as many states have already secured.

Whereas, The results of the good work and the public sentiment aroused by this congress depends on its continuation,

Resolved, That the counties of the state organize by the formation of auxiliary associations to work in harmony with the aims and purposes of this congress.

Too Much Love

By OSCAR COX

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association

While serving with my regiment as surgeon at Manila I received a letter from my old friend Dick Thurston at Batavia, Java, asking me if it would be possible for me to come down and see him. He was ill, and despite the fact that he was taking the best care of himself he didn't get any better. Couldn't I obtain a leave even for a few days?

I succeeded in getting a leave, and I found Dick Thurston on a coffee plantation, where he had gone some months before in the interest of an American grocery concern. He was living with a Javanese family, consisting of a mother, a daughter some twenty-five years old and several children. The young woman was attending to the patient's wants. Indeed, she had the whole care of him.

Dick was suffering from malignant dysentery. I put him under treatment, but got no response. A couple of days after I began he was as bad as ever. What puzzled me was that his trouble was intermittent. At one time he would appear so well that I couldn't believe there was anything the matter with him. Then, when I was congratulating myself that he was going to come out of it, down he would go again. As for the drugs I gave him, they appeared to have no effect whatever.

I hadn't been attending him long before I discovered that the Javanese girl who nursed him was in love with him. This set me to thinking. I had seen an extract somewhere—I think it was in a newspaper—from an old Dutch report stating that when a Javanese woman takes a fancy to an European she will either have him or poison him if she gets the chance. Might not this be a case in point? Without saying anything to Dick I resolved to watch her. She was very regular in bringing in his meals, and on several occasions when she did so I concealed myself in a closet, keeping my eye to a nail hole. But if she was poisoning his food she didn't do it when she gave it to him.

"Dick," I said to my patient, "your [illegible] I vex you."

"You don't mean it!" he exclaimed, astonished.

"Have you been making love to her?"

"I have never thought of such a thing."

"Have you any objection to doing so?"

Dick demurred, but [illegible] had a theory [illegible] his illness he finally consented. The next time she was with him he called her to him, took her hand in his and told her that her kindness was winning his heart. She did not object to a caress and went away looking very happy.

The next day Dick was better.

I told him to keep up his lovemaking for a few days, and he did so, with the result that his improvement was remarkable. I didn't care enough for further experimenting to ask him to [illegible] his devotional attitude and grow worse, so I resolved to eat some of his food myself. But to get the food that I was sure was poisoned I was obliged to have him do this very thing. He turned away from her, but did not eat the next meal she brought him. I smuggled in some food for him, ate a little of that the girl brought him and made away with the rest surreptitiously. The test fulfilled the conditions. The whole length of my alimentary canal became irritated. This was the same symptom as Thurston's. I didn't care to repeat the experiment.

There was now nothing to do but get the patient from out the clutches of this too much loving nurse, but my curiosity was aroused as to what poison she was using. I thought of watching her as she prepared the food, but to do this was impracticable. I would have tested the food chemically, but had no materials for the purpose. I was puzzled.

I had, among other instruments I had brought with me, a pocket microscope. It was by no means so powerful as the regular instrument, but excellent for its grade. For the want of something better I one day took up this microscope and brought it to bear on some of the food I had eaten. Immediately the cause of the trouble was revealed to me. The substance was filled with fine hairs—not animal, but vegetable—hollow tubes spiked like bayonets.

And these things had been passing through Dick's digestive organs. No wonder that he was ill. A comparatively few of them had made me feel as if I had eaten hot lead.

I took some of the food to a Javanese man from whom Dick had been buying coffee, showed him the hairs with the microscope and asked him what they were.

"Those," he said, "are bamboo poison hairs, so called from the fact that they are used by our people who wish to get some one out of the way."

After a consultation Dick and I decided that we didn't care to have anything to do with Javanese justice, so I advised him to keep on good terms with his "sweetheart" for a few days that he might get no more spikes in his stomach and get well. Nevertheless, before he ate any of the food she gave him I examined it with my glass.

Then one fine morning we walked away, leaving the maiden glaring at Dick from the door where he had said goodby to her.

Why He Didn't Go to Church.

A Scottish minister who was indefatigable in looking up his folk one day called upon a parishioner. "Richard," he said, "I hae na seen ye at the kirk for some time and wad like to know the reason."

"Weel, sir," answered Richard, "I hae three decided objections to goin'—firstly, I dinna believe in bein' whaur ye does a' the talkin'; secondly, I dinna believe in sic muckle singin', an', thirdly an' in conclusion, 'twas there I got my wife."

You no doubt find it a hard matter to sell your rough lumber to advantage because most of your customers want it finished. Furthermore you can get twice as much for your lumber by planing it, making it up into flooring, drop siding, window casing and mouldings, for which there is an unlimited demand at big prices. The Howell Planer and Matcher does all this work to perfection.
You can also make big money by working up all your slabs and waste material into Lath and Shingles. All you need for this purpose is our Lath Mill and Shingle Machine. We build the best and most up-to-date machines of this kind on the market which we can furnish you at manufacturers prices. Keep your plant running all the time. Remember we build complete Saw Mill Plants from top to bottom, all of our own manufacture. Our new Catalog B is just now out. If you have not received it, write to-day. Manufactured by Letters by Wire.

Announcement is made by the Western Union Telegraph company that it will shortly be prepared to handle long night messages at the rates customarily charged for ten-word day messages.

The announcement states that "a special Night Letter service will be established as soon as practicable. The charge for this service will be the standard day rate for ten words, for the transmission of fifty words or less, and one-fifth of such standard day rate will be charged for each additional ten words or less."

To be taken at these rates, "Night Letters" must be written in plain English, that is to say code words or communications written in foreign languages will not be accepted. The messages will be taken at any hour up to midnight and transmitted at the company's convenience during the night for delivery the following morning. The tariff charged for Night Letters is so low that it is expected that the new service will be largely availed of by business concerns and others to quicken their correspondence by using the telegraph instead of the mails. A Night Letter sent by telegraph will reach its destination at the opening of business hours the following morning, thus saving as much as three or four days when long distances are involved.

Get the Choice Oranges of Our 5,000 Groves

We pick, pack and ship 60% of the California Orange crop. These are of varying grades. The choicest selections are packed under the "Sunkist" label. To get the finest oranges you must insist on fruit that is wrapped in tissue paper with the word "Sunkist" printed thereon.

"Sunkist" Navel Oranges Are Seedless

They are delightfully sweet, juicy and fiberless. They are firm, thin skinned and deep tinted.

"Sunkist" oranges and lemons are picked by gloved hands, wrapped in "Sunkist" tissue paper, packed carefully so as to eliminate chances of becoming bruised or soft. No bruised fruit or fruit that falls to the ground is put in a "Sunkist" wrapper.

Look for "Sunkist" on the wrapper. Ask your dealer for oranges and lemons with "Sunkist" label on the tissue paper wrapper. Oranges and lemons without "Sunkist" wrappers are not "Sunkist" brand. Be sure you get oranges and lemons in their original "Sunkist" wrappers.

Free: Rogers' Orange Spoon

To make it doubly interesting for you to insist on "Sunkist" in the original wrappers—either oranges or lemons—we will give you a beautiful Rogers' Orange Spoon. Just send us twelve wrappers and six 2c stamps for postage, packing, etc., and we will send the spoon by return mail. Get a dozen "Sunkist" and send today for your first spoon. Address

JOSEPH SCHUSSER

Passed Away Saturday Evening After Long Illness.

After an illness lasting nineteen months, during a greater part of which time he was confined to the house, Joseph Schusser passed away at 8:10 o'clock last Saturday evening. Death was due to paralysis.

Deceased was fory-one years old. He was born in Calumet county, Wis., Oct. 18, 1868, but for more than twenty years he has resided in Red Lake Falls. Eighteen years ago Mr. Schusser and Miss Emma Sandberg were married. Mr. Schusser is survived by his widow and two daughters, Bernetta, aged 16, and Irene, 11 years old. Other relatives are his mother, Mrs. Anna Schusser, who resides in this city and four sisters and three brothers.

The brothers and sisters are, Carl Schusser and Miss Sophia Schusser of this city, Mrs. Pat Roark of Thief River Falls, Mrs. Paul Holznecht of Missoula, Mont., Mrs. Wm. Lennon of Kelliher, Michael Schusser of Cour de Alene, Idaho, and A. E. Schusser of Bemidji. Mrs Roark, Mrs. Lennon and A. E. Schusser were here for the funeral.

The funeral services were held Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at St. Mary's church, of which deceased was a member, Rev. Fr. Ambrose officiating. Members of the Woodmen lodge, of which deceased was a member, attended in a body.

Boy Rescued From Drowning.

The three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Torstvet had a very narrow escape last Tuesday morning. The little fellow had been playing in the back yard with his older sister and he had made bold to go near the mill-race situated just back of the Torstvet home. The little girl missing her brother ran and told her mother that he had fallen into the river. Mrs. Torstvet rushed to the scene and discovered the unconscious body lying on the bottom of the mill race. She jumped in and carried him to a place of safety where with the assistance of neighbors he was finally restored after much persistant work.

If the mill had been running there is little doubt that the currant would have been strong enough to have carried the little fellow down the stream and beyond the power of rescue in a very few moments.—Theif River Press.

IN THE SPRING A YOUNG MAN'S FANCY--

Six Weddings in Four Days is the Record for Red Lake Falls.

Dan Cupid has abandoned the worn out custom of going hunting with a poor imitation of a red man's hunting paraphenalia and now he carries a gatling gun or perhaps it is one of those "ten shots quick" shooting pieces. Anyhow he gets 'em in bunches and six weddings in four days is the new record for Red Lake Falls. Tuesday was the red letter day when three "nuptial events" were pulled off and the supply of rice and old shoes is exhausted.

Olson—Regnstrand

Judge V. M. Higubotham started the good work when he officiated at the marriage of Mr. Wigor Regnstrand of McIntosh and Miss Dora Olson of Thief River Falls. The ceremony was performed at the office of Clerk of Court C. W. Johnson and during the hour and forty-seven minutes it took the judge to perform the ceremony a large number of young people clamoring for marriage licenses gathered at the door of the clerk's office. Judge Higinbotham is receiving the hearty congratulations of friends for having come out of the ordeal, his first marriage ceremony, in such excellent condition. Mr. Regnstrand and his bride, it is said, are claiming a world's record in a new endurance test. Mr. and Mrs. Renstrand left Saturday evening for McIntosh where they will reside.

Bedord—Bjorgo

Miss Josephinse Bedord and Mr. Fred C. Bjorgo were married Tuesday morning, March 29. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church, Rev Fr. Bossus officiating.

Fathergale—Raymond

Miss Beatrice Fathergale, step daughter of John Hunter, who resides southeast of town, and Mr. Emil Raymond, who resides in Polk county, near Mentor, were married Sunday, March 27. The ceremony was performed at four o'clock Sunday afternoon at the residence of Judge S.A. Swansen, the judge performing the ceremony. This was the most romantic of the weddings of the week, for friends of the young people knew nothing about it and Mr. Hunter says he believes it was an elopement for he wasn't consulted.

Prudhomme—Beede

Miss Delema Prudhomme, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Prudhomme of this city, and Mr. Harry Beede of Crookston were married Monday, March 28. The ceremony was performed at nine o'clock in the morning at St. Joseph's church, Rev. Fr. Bossus officiating. Monday evening the young people left on a short wedding trip after which they will go to housekeeping at Crookston.

Bottineau—Cyr

Miss Emily Bottineau and Mr. Joseph L. Cyr, both of this city, were married Tuesday morning, March 26. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church, Rev. Fr. Bossus officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Cyr left Tuesday evening on a wedding trip to the twin cities. They will live in Red Lake Falls and after April 10 will be at home to their friends. They will occupy a house in "Little Canada."

Robillard—Cyr

Miss Anna Robillard and Mr. George Cyr, both well known young people of this city, were married Tuesday afternoon, March 29. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church at 4 o'clock, Rev. Fr. Bossus officiating. The young people were attended by Miss Laura Cyr, sister of the groom, and Mr. Ernest Tonpin. The automobile which conveyed the wedding party to and from the church was artistically decorated with old shoes and other appropriate trimmings. HOUSE BURNED

Residence of Alex Wolf Destroyed Yesterday.

The house owned by Alex Wolf and located in the southern limits of the city was burned to the ground yesterday afternoon. The house was so far out that it was impossible for the firemen to get water to it and the building burned to the ground in a short time and it was impossible to save much of the household goods.

Two families lived in the house, the family of Alex Wolf, the owner of the building, and the family of his son, Noah Wolf. The fire started from a defective chimney. The building was insured for $900 and the two sets of household goods for an equal amount. The loss will not much exceed the amount of the insurance.

The concert given at the Bijou theatre last evening by the Red Lake Falls concert band was the best that the band boys have given in many months and the good music was appreciated by an audience that should have been much larger than it was. The good work that the band boys are doing gives promise that the people of Red Lake Falls are going to enjoy some fine open air concerts next summer.

JIM HILL SAYS:

"We will have a famine inside of fifty years if the farmers don't fertilize properly."

The time has come when every good, progressive farmer knows that it pays to keep stock and also to own a manure spreader. Now then, after you have made up your mind that a manure spreader is the best investment you can make, the question of what spreader to buy has come to you. When you buy a horse you don't take the first old pelter that is offered you. We say to you, that there is just as much difference in manure spreaders as there is in horses. Let us help you. We will show you what is best in spreader construction so you will know what to look for and what you are paying for.

Before You Buy

Take a day off and look at the Great Western. Take along a knife, a rule and a sledge hammer. Jab your knife into the sills, cross frame, bolsters, axle caps, heater bars, pole, etc., and see what they are made of. If they are not oak you don't want them. Take your rule and measure these parts. You don't want light parts. They won't stand the heavy work. Take a sledge hammer and pound the fifth wheel or circle, tie clips and parts. See if they are cast iron or malleable. You will need strength in your soft yards. Make a comparison of other machines with Great Western construction. Make it fairly and honestly. Make it yourself. Keep in mind the fact that you are buying a manure spreader and not a line of talk some salesman hands out to you. It's your money you are spending. The Great Wester Spreader is made for the man who wants the very best.

KENNEDY ESTATE

ADMINISTRATORS OFFER $135,00 TAX IF STATE DROPS CLAIM FOR $450,000.

IS LATEST PROPOSITION

Estate Claims Immunity, but Offers This sum as Compromise to Save Litigation.

So. St. Paul, March 19.—If the state of Minnesota is willing to accept $135,000 for its claim of something like $450,000 against the J. S. Kennedy estate of New York, in the shape of inheritance taxes, it can have it without further litigation.

This does not necessarily mean that the administration of the estate acknowledges the state right to collect on stock owned by non-residents and represented by property located within the state, but is merely for the purpose of getting rid of a lot of expensive litigation, the outcome of which some claim is doubtful.

Cooper on Proposition.

This compromise was put up to Governor Eberhart, State Auditor Iverson, and members of the state tax commission by Attorney General G. T. Simpson on his return from the east, at a conference held in the attorney general's office.

It was some months ago that Mr. Simpson startled the legal fraternity with the announcement that he intended to enforce the state inheritance tax law against non-residents. It had never been done before and there was some doubt.

The estate of J. S. Kennedy of New York, owner of Great Northern stock aggregating $14,000,000 in value, was selected for the test and claims against the property were immediately filed. As an aid Louis W. Weeks, assistant to Mr. Simpson, was appointed resident administrator of the estate by Probate Judge E. W. Bazille of St. Paul. This was done on petition by Mr. Simpson.

Since then a quiet investigation as to the value of the property represented in Minnesota has been on and as far as known the estimate has been in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. This was ascertained by taking the Great Northern holdings and deducting the Minnesota mileage.

Mr. Simpson, it is said, is unwilling to accept the amount tendered unless backed by the other state officials. He even doubts his authority to make a compromise when such would be taken as equivalent to an admission of the state's contention that it has power to reach the property even though it is outside the state.

TO VOTE ON MANKATO CHARTER.

Commission Form of Government Question At Issue.

Mankato. — The new city charter, providing a commission form of government, will be submitted at a special election, April 26. Council so decided, practically unanimously, after a fight lasting several weeks.

Only one alderman is personally in favor of the new charter, but public opinion is so strong for it that only one voted against calling the election.

Those who opposed it wanted it submitted at the general election in November when its chances of carrying would be materially lessened, because every ballot that did not contain a vote on the charter would be counted as a vote against it.

Opposition to the charter has greatly lessened since last fall, and the commission form is expected to carry by a good majority.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION

Of Minnesota to be Held Middle of June.

Minneapolis. — A. D. Brown, chairman of the Republican state central committee, has called a special meeting of the committee to decide upon a date for holding the Republican state convention. The meeting of the committee will be held at the Merchants' hotel in St. Paul, at noon, April 2. The generally accepted date for the state convention is about June 15.

The committee will also decide upon the place of holding the convention, and Minneapolis appears to be the favorite for choice. The last Republican convention was held in St. Paul, and the Democratic convention in Minneapolis. It is likely the two conventions will alternate, although there is a chance that both will be held in Minneapolis.

BARTENDER IS INDICTED

Chaska, Minn., Grand Jury Investigating Death of Man.

Chaska.—The grand jury is investigating the charges of manslaughter in the first degree preferred against a saloonkeeper here, now in jail, who is alleged to have sold liquor to a man in such quantities as to cause his death. The grand jury has been hearing evidence in this case for over a week. The victim is Julius Euntick, who died February 19.

CAPITOL IS TOO SMALL.

Custodian Has Hard Job Parceling Out Spare Rooms.

St. Paul.—Custodian Downs at the capitol is having his hands full of trouble trying to take care of all the departments that want additional room. Just now two departments, the superintendent of public instruction and the railroad and warehouse commission are after the room in the north wing which Downs has been using as his office. Superintendent Schulz had spoken for the room some time ago, and Downs had told him that if he ever moved out he would get it. Last week the railroad commission wanted the room for its engineers, and Downs decided to move the cigar stand into the corridor and use that room himself. But then he remembered his promise to Schultz, and the railroad commission apparently is no nearer than it was to getting additional room.

One plan that has been suggested is to take one room away from the public examiner, who now occupies the whole west side of the north wing. Since the superintendent of banks was created and that office was given rooms in the basement, the number of employes and callers at the public examiner's offices has greatly decreased, but whether Mr. Schaefer is willing to give up the room he has is another question.

BULL HURTS FARMER.

Vicious Animal Knocks Master Down and Besieges House.

Marshall. — Robert Boulton, living northwest of town, was attacked by a vicious bull on his farm, and is now laid up with serious injuries. Mr. Boulton attempted to drive the animal into the barn, when the bull suddenly turned on him, and, knocking him down, trampled him and rolled him several rods into a river, where he threw the man into the water and held him in.

Mr. Boulton got hold of the ring in the animal's nose and a spirited tussle ensued until the bull tore loose. The bull went out on one side of the creek and Mr. Boulton on the other, and he was able to crawl to the house before the bull overtook him again. Mrs. Boulton was a helpless spectator of the whole struggle, and so vicious was the animal that for hours he maintained an effectual blockade of the house, not permitting Mrs. Boulton to leave the residence, which she repeatedly attempted to do in order to get medical help and assistance.

Finally the animal retreated, and the wife was able to make her way to a neighbor's place and secured assistance. Mr. Boulton is suffering from several broken ribs and other internal injuries.

TO COMPENSATE HOFFMAN HEIRS

Bill Introduced By Clapp Is Passed By the Senate.

Red Wing.—The senate at Washington has passed a bill introduced by Senator Clapp for the relief of the heirs of John Hoffman, who lived on Prairie Island. The bill provides for the payment out of the treasury of the sum of $1,200 to the heirs of John Hoffman in settlement for 40 acres of land near the Hastings asylum, Hastings.

The land in question was patented in 1857 to Charles P. Adams and it afterwards was repurchased by the government with the intention of alloting the lands to certain Indians. It was so allotted to John Hoffman, who was known as Indian John along the river between Red Wing and Wabasha, which was his hunting ground. Under an act of congress, approved March 19, 1906, the land in question was conveyed to the state of Minnesota. The land adjoins the grounds of the Hastings state asylum and it was greatly needed by that institution. The bill in question now before the house is for the compensation of the heirs of Hoffman.

OWNERSHIP DEAL DRAGS.

Stillwater Council and Water Company Fail to Agree on Terms.

Stillwater.—The city council postponed action on the proposition to purchase the waterworks plant. The company will sell for $142,500 in cash or for $147,000 in 4 per cent bonds. There was no discussion, but the council evidently wants to buy for $142,500 in bonds.

Consideration of the proposal to annex the town of Oak Park to Stillwater was deferred indefinitely. Officers of the city were authorized to enter into a contract with the Consumers' Power company to install electric motors for the operation of the pontoon section of the bridge over the St. Croix. A saving of 50 per cent is expected.

The board of education decided last night to install domestic science in the schools next year. W. H. Hollands was re-engaged for superintendent of the schools for a term of two years at an advance of salary. Four teachers were chosen to fill vacancies.

RALPH JONES DRAWS 30 YEARS.

Prisoner Stood Unmoved When Judge Pronounced Sentence.

Duluth. — For the brutal murder of Walter Whitehead, the negro pugilist, Ralph Jones will spend the next 30 years of his life in the Minnesota state prison at Stillwater. Jones was allowed to plead guilty to the charge of murder in the third degree and he was at once sentenced to 30 years by Judge William A. Cent, of the district court.

Special Train Bears 100 Immigrants.

New York, N. Y. — One of the most remarkable parties of immigrants that ever came to this country arrived on the Lapland. The foreigners are speeding west in a special train for their future homes in Minnesota. There are some 100 of these sturdy Dutch—men, women and children—well supplied with money and traveling de luxe in two Pullmans, a smoking car, a diner and a baggage car. The exodus of Hollanders is the result of a plan originated by Bishop James McGolrick of Duluth.

GREET ROOSEVELT

SURPRISES EX-PRESIDENT

When Distinguished Traveler Looked Out Over City He Was Greeted By a Sea of Upturned Faces. Glad to Get Home.

Cairo, Egypt, March 24.—This has been Roosevelt day in Cairo. The old and new civilizations of the Egyptian metropolis co-operated to give the distinguished American a welcome that in cordiality and enthusiasm surpassed that received by any other foreigner within the memory of the present generation.

The train from Luxor bearing Col. Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, Kermit and Miss Ethel, due here at 7:55 this morning, drew into the station a few minutes after 8 o'clock and the visitors' first view of the capital was across a sea of faces that appeared to surprise the former president, accustomed as he is to waiting crowds.

Before daylight the city had been decked with American flags from old Arabian Cairo through the Ezbekiah garden to the fashionable foreign quarter of Izmailiya. For days the one topic of conversation has been the expected arrival of the American statesman and hunter, and in the restaurants, on the streets and in the corridors of the hotels, his name was heard continually. The season at the hotels is nearly closed, but hundreds of Americans and other tourists remained for today's demonstration. An hour before train time an enormous crowd gathered at the railway station.

WILL RAISE MAINE.

Congress Passes Bill for That Purpose.

Washington, March 24.—The bulk of the ill-fated battleship Maine, sunk in the harbor of Havana, will be raised so that the remains of any of the sailors dead that may be within the wreck may be recovered and so that an examination may be made to determine if possible the manner in which the vessel was destroyed, if the senate approves a bill passed by the house yesterday.

The remains of sailors that might be recovered would be interred in Arlington cemetery on the Virginia shore opposite Washington.

For two hours republicans and democrats spoke in favor of removing the wreck from Havana harbor.

As passed by the house, the bill was changed in its general terms, so as to authorize the work to be done under the direction of the engineer corps of the army, with the consent of the republic of Cuba.

By the insistence of Mr. Sulzer of New York, the bill was worded to require the "raising" as well as the "removal" of the wreck so that an examination could be made of the hulk to determine the manner of the vessel's destruction.

Race War Feared.

Portland, Ore., March 24.—With Greek and Italian laborers, of whom there are 150, arming themselves for a clash, serious trouble is feared at St. John, a suburb, where 100 white men and 300 Hindus clashed in a race riot late yesterday. It appears that the rioting was directed at white foreigners, employed by the lumber mills at St. John, as well as toward the Hindus, two of whom were badly injured.

Last night the authorities took into custody twenty-eight men charged with robbery in connection with the trouble and they hold warrants for 113 more of the rioters. These arrests and the reports that the company will take back the Hindus have caused an exceedingly ugly feeling and threats are being made to drive out of town not only the Hindus, but the Greek and Italian laborers also.

The trouble started over the fact that the Hindus recently took the place of a white crew at the plant and were accepting about half the rate of wages which had been paid to the Caucasians.

To Enlarge Committee.

Washington, March 24.—The interest of the house membership today centered on the final make-up of the committee. The leaders on both sides expect great things of the committee. The regular republicans, some of them at least, concede that the augmentation of the numbers of the committees is a step in the right direction and already there is talk of increasing the number of the members to eleven so as to provide an odd number to avoid tie votes.

This talk however, has not crystallized into any definite shape and if any such movement is made it will not be at this session of congress.

Dalzell's selection as chairman is expected because of his seniority of service on the committee.

School is Closed.

Beloit, Wis., March 24.—Because of the fear of being quarantined for scarlet fever, Beloit college closed its doors today for two weeks. The regular spring recess was not due until Friday noon, but President Eaton posted a notice closing the school to avoid the "inconvenience of being quarantined."

To Conserve Headwaters.

Washington, March 24.—The Weeks bill for conserving the head waters of navigable streams and appropriating not to exceed $11,000,000 during the next five years for the acquisition of lands in any of the states for that purpose, was favorably acted upon by the house committee of agriculture

Cudahy Case Dismissed.

Kansas City, Mo., March 23.—The case growing out of the attack made by J. P. Cudahy, the packer, upon Jere Lillis, the banker, was dismissed in the municipal court here today by Daniel Howell, assistant city attorney.

Strike is Averted.

Chicago, March 23.—Commissioner of Labor Neill, the railway managers and representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen spent the day in working out details of the compromise effected yesterday whereby the strike of the brotherhood members was averted.

New Troops at Ft. Lincoln.

Bismarck, N. D., March 23.—The detachment of the 14th Infantry, U. S. A., arrived in Bismarck yesterday and were at once transferred to the Fort Lincoln track and the cars set out inside the lines of the military reserve.

CONFESSIONS ARE CLOSED

CITY OF PITTSBURG WILL LEARN DETAILS OF RECENT GRAFT

Judge Says No More Immunity Will be Granted and Prosecution Will Begin Against Many Offenders.

Pittsburg, March 23.—Nine more councilmanic grafters confessed their guilt to Judge Robert S. Frazer today. No more confessions will be received. Those caught in the public prosecutor's dragnet from now on, it is said, will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. At noon today twenty-nine former and present members of the municipal legislative machine of the city of greater Pittsburg had received immunity at the hands of the lenient judge and the diligent prosecuting attorneys.

With a full confession of the ring leaders of the graft councils of 1908 and the confession of William Brad, former president of the common councils expected hourly, material is in the hands of the district attorney to indict more persons for grafting. These indictments it is reported will bring into the graft crusade bankers, real estate men and manufacturers in this vicinity.

The grand jury which is investigating the city council scandals was expected to bring today another remarkable bunch of indictments. Men said to be named in presentments are prominent in business and social life, and are chiefly alleged bribe givers in the system of wholesale corruption, the exposure of which has thoroughly shaken many political foundations.

Coincident with the bringing of Joseph C. Wasson from the western penitentiary came the statement by the authorities that today would be a "big day" in point of public interest. Wasson is a former council member and was one of the notorious "big six" in city politics. He is now serving an eighteen-months sentence for bribe-taking.

HAS U. S. LOST PRESTIGE?

English Statesman Believe Japan Has Outwitted Nation.

London, March 22.—Stung by American attempts to lower the prestige and reduce the power of Japan in the far east the statesmen of Tokio have engineered a vast tacit coalition against the United States, according to reports in circulation in semi-official circles. Cloaking their motives in public clamor against America in Japan, while ostensibly frowning on these demonstrations, the advisers of the Japanese emperor are declared to have been quietly working for the combination that would effectually shut off America's prospects of sharing in the unplumbed Asiatic markets. The results of these efforts are already apparent and it is expected that within three months an open move will be made showing the hand of the conspiring nation. Mr. Oishi, a prominent member of the diet, demanded an alliance with Russia at Tokio yesterday at the people's party convention.

Roosevelt is Reticent.

Luxor, Upper Egypt, March 28.—Colonel Roosevelt when asked today whether it was true, as reported from Washington that he had summoned Gifford Pinchot, the deposed chief forester of the United States, to meet him at Naples or some other European point for a conference concerning the present conservation policy, gave no response.

Roosevelt is consistently holding to his determination, announced as he merged from the jungle, not to answer any questions on any matter personal or political. As he has before said, Colonel Roosevelt has been for some time out of touch with American politics and in his recent public and private utterances he has scrupulously avoided anything that could be construed as comment on governmental affairs at home or the policies of the man who succeeded him in the presidency.

Officer's Wife Meets Death.

Washington, March 23.—Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, chief of staff of the army, was badly, but probably not dangerously injured and Mrs. Herbert J. Slocum, wife of Major Slocum, of the seventh cavalry was almost instantly killed early today in the collision of their auto with a trolley car on the Tenallytown road in the northwest outskirts of the city. General Bell sustained one rib broken, a bad scalp wound and several severe bruises.

Sympathetic Strike Off.

Philadelphia, March 23.—Terrible workers of Kensington, who with the members of the Allied Trades, formed the backbone of the general strike, which is on in their city in sympathy with the striking car men, resumed work today. There were 35,000 textile workers and they went back in a body.

Drug Store Bandit Sentenced.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 23.—Stephen Austin Gillette, self-confessed drug store bandit, was given an indeterminate sentence of two to ten years in the penitentiary today.

Two More Dead.

Marshalltown, Ia., March 23.—Two victims of the wreck of the Rock Island Twin City express died in Marshalltown hospital today, increasing the list of fatalities to forty-nine.

Strike Melts Away.

Following up the action of the textile union in voting to return to work, tens of thousands of mill hands who struck in sympathy with the trolleymen returned to work today in the Kensington district.

Practically all the mills started up and it was expected other unions still on strike would follow the action of the textile workers.

Favorably Reported.

Washington, March 24.—The administration railroad bill, introduced by Representative Townsend, of Michigan, and largely amended in committee, was ordered favorably reported by the house committee on interstate commerce today.

Des Moines Loses Fight.

Washington, March 24.—The city of Des Moines, Iowa, today lost its fight for a readjustment of the freight rates from that city to points in western Minnesota and North and South Dakota, when the interstate commerce commission announced its decision

TAFT'S BUSY DAY

PRESIDENT ATTENDED MEETINGS IN TWO DIFFERENT CITIES.

BREAKFASTS WITH GREY

New York, March 21.—President Taft reached here at 7 o'clock this morning over the New York Central railroad from Albany. His car was immediately attached to an express on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad leaving at 8 a. m. for New Haven, where the president was to attend a meeting of Yale corporation.

During the hour interval at the station here the president breakfasted in his car with Earl Gray, governor general of Canada and Collector Loeb, jr., of the port of New York who were Taft's guests on the trip from Albany.

New Haven, Conn., March 21.—President Taft arrived in this city at 9:49 a. m. He entered a waiting automobile and was driven directly to Woodbridge hall to attend the meeting of the Yale corporation.

Providence, R. I., March 21.—Ending his swing through the north central and eastern section of the country on a tour of speech making and tariff elucidation, begun last Wednesday, President Taft is to be in Providence tonight as the guest of honor at the annual banquet of the New England Manufacturing Jewelers and Silversmiths' association. With him at the speakers' table will be Rhode Island's two United States senators, Nelson Aldrich and Geo. P. Wetmore, together with Governor Pothier, Mayor Fletcher and others.

When the president leaves Providence early tomorrow morning he will carry with him as a valuable souvenir of his visit a solid gold jewelry case.

A NATIONAL STRIKE.

Leather Workers Ask For An Eight-Hour Day and Increase of Pay.

St. Paul, Minn., March 21.—At 9 o'clock this morning 155 members of the St. Paul lodge of International Brotherhood of Leatherworkers struck for 15 per cent increase on piece work and an eight-hour day. At four leather plants little information could be learned regarding the strike. Employers all declared that they could "sit tight" and that there was absolutely no chance of a compromise.

St. Joseph, Mo., March 21.—More than 200 leather workers employed in St. Joseph harness factories struck today on being refused a ten hour wage scale for an eight hour work day.

Louisville, Ky., March 21.—About 300 harness makers went on strike today for shorter working day and 15 per cent increase in wage. Ten factories are affected.

Fargo, N. D., March 21.—On refusal of their demands for an eight hour day and 15 per cent wage increase between seventy-five and eighty leather workers walked out of the local harness factories this morning, complying with the national strike order issued from Chicago.

Pittsburg Has Graft Scandal.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 21.—Greater Pittsburg is again in the throes of a councilmanic graft scandal. "Captain Johnny Klein, about to be taken to the penitentiary under sentence for receiving money in 1908 for his vote in the selection of the city depository, has made good his threat to "pull down props and let the sky fall."

District Attorney Blakely told the whole story to Judges Frazer and Chosen in the criminal courts today. The public prosecutor told the court that Klein, during the last few days, had made a statement which covered a period of years and which has since been corroborated, exposing the whole system of corruption in former councils. He said six banks here had, in 1908, paid a sum of $102,000 to be elected city depositories. He also told the court that the street vacation frauds were detailed in Klein's statement.

Mediation Seems Hopeless.

Chicago, March 21.—When C. P. Neill, United States commissioner of labor, met the representatives of the Brotherhood of Railway Firemen and Enginemen and the general managers of forty-seven railroads today, peaceful settlement between the opposing sides appeared as far away as ever.

It was generally believed that today would see the last of the conferences.

Martin A. Knapp, chairman of the interstate commerce commission, returned to Washington Saturday night having apparently given up mediation as hopeless. The firemen today seemed as determined as ever and it was feared a general strike of 27,000 men interested was imminent.

Every effort was made today to bring about a peaceful settlement.

$150,000 Fire in Canada.

Winnipeg, Man., March 21.—All last night fire raged in the town of Outlook, Sask., when the principal business street was wiped out. The loss is $150,000. Several stores, postoffice and dwellings were destroyed.

Ice Gorge Smashes Engine.

Hastings, Minn., March 21.—The ice gorge in the river at this point gave way, the large boulders and cakes of ice smashing the engine shed and cylinder pump of Glenn Bros. on the south shore, and wrecking over a hundred feet of the boat guard west of the drawbridge.

Welsh Miners May Strike.

Cardiff, March 21.—The prolonged negotiations over the new wage agreement between the South Wales coal owners and miners were broken off today, and a strike of 200,000 miners is regarded as inevitable on March 31.

CHAPTER X.—Continued.

"[illegible] this woman's dressing is very difficult to learn," Baraka went on, leaning back upon the rail with both [illegible] and stretching out her little [illegible] together. "Without the girl Marcy whom you have found for me—but her real name is Gula, and she is a good Mussulman—without her, Allah knows what I should do! I could not put on these things for myself, alone, I cannot take them off. When I was like a man, buttons! Two, three, four, twenty—what did it matter? All the same way and soon done! But now, I cannot tell what I am made of. Allah knows and sees what I am made of. Hooks, eyes, strings, little bits one way, little bits the other way, like the rigging of ships—those Turkish ships with many small sails that go up the Bosphorus, you remember? And it is all behind, as if one had no front! Gula knows how it is done. But if I were alone, without her help, Allah is my witness, I would tie the things all round me decently and sit very still for fear they should come off! That is what I should do!"

"You will soon grow used to it," he said. "But you must get some pretty things in Paris before you go to meet the man. It would also be better to let your hair grow long before meeting him, for it is hard to wear the hats of the Feringhi ladies without hair."

"I cannot wait so long as that. Only to get pretty dresses, only so long! I will spend a thousand pounds or two—is that enough? I have much money in Paris; I can give much."

"You can get a good many things for a thousand pounds, even in Paris," Logotheti answered.

"It will not be what I paid for the first clothes after I ran away," she said. "I did not know then what the stones were worth! A little ruby to one woman for a shift and an overtunic, a little ruby to another for a pair of shoes, a little ruby for a veil and a head-blanket, all little rubies! For each thing one! I did not know; the women did not know. But at Samarkand I sold one for money to a good Persian merchant, and what he gave me was enough for the journey, for me and the old woman servant I hired there, till we got to Tiflis; for the Persian merchants everywhere gave me letters from one to another, and their wives took me in, or I should have been robbed. That is how I reached Stamboul after many, many months, more than a year. The Persian merchants are good men. All fear them, because they are wise in their dealings, but they are honest men. They do not lie, but they are silent and shake their heads, and you must guess what they mean; and if you do not guess right, that is your fault, not theirs. Why should they speak when they can hold their peace? But this is all emptiness! We must talk of the fine dresses I must buy in Paris, and of what I must put on my head. The barbers in Paris sell wigs. I have seen them in the windows, very well made, of all colors, even of the Khenna color. I shall wear a wig, so that the beautiful Feringhi hat will stay on. I shall perhaps wear a Khenna-colored wig."

"I should not advise a wig," said Logotheti gravely, "certainly not one of that dye."

"You know, and you are a friend. When I feel rested we will go to Paris, and you shall take me to all the richest shops and tell them in French what I want. Will you?"

"I shall do all I can to help you," answered the Greek, wondering what would happen if his friends met him piloting a lovely barbarian about between the smartest linen draper's and the most fashionable dressmaker's establishment in the Rue de la Paix.

The two dined on deck, with shaded lights, but screened from the draught of the ship's way. The evening was cool, and the little maid had dressed Baraka in a way that much disturbed her, for her taper arms were bare to the elbows, and the pretty little ready-made French dress was open at her ivory neck, and the skirt fitted so closely that she almost fancied herself in man's clothes again. But on her head she would only wear a large veil, confined by a bit of gold cord, and she drew one fold under her chin, and threw it over the opposite shoulder, to be quite covered; and she was glad when she felt cold, and could wrap herself in the wide travelling cloak they had bought her, and yet not seem to do anything contrary to the customs of a real Feringhi lady.

CHAPTER XI.

"You don't mean to say you've come right through?" he inquired, looking at her with admiration as he grasped her hand. "You're as fresh as paint!"

"That's rather a dangerous thing to say to a woman nowadays," she answered in her rippling voice. "But mine won't come off. How is Margaret?"

Her tone changed as she asked the question.

"She showed me your letter about Logo," answered her friend without heeding the question, and watching her face to see if she were surprised.

She got into the carriage he had brought, and he stood by the door waiting for the porter, who was getting her luggage. She had no maid with her.

"I'm glad you have told me," she answered, "though I wish she had not. You probably think that when I wrote that letter I remembered what you said to me in London about giving me money for my poor women."

"No," said Van Torp thoughtfully, "I don't believe I do think so. It was like me to make the offer, Maud. It was like the sort of man I've been, and you've known me. But it wouldn't have been like you to accept it. It wasn't exactly low-down of me to say what I did, but it's so precious like low-down that I wouldn't say it again, and I suppose I'm sorry. That's all."

His rough hand was on the side of the little open carriage. She touched it lightly with her gloved fingers and withdrew them instantly, for the porter was coming with her not very voluminous luggage.

"Thank you," she said quickly. "I understood, and I understand now."

They drove slowly up the Bahnhofstrasse, through the dull little town, that looks so thoroughly conscious of its ancient respectability as having once been the "residenz" of a duke of Wurtemburg, and of its vast importance as the headquarters of Richard Wagner's representatives on earth.

"See here," said Mr. Van Torp. "I've almost persuaded them all to run down to Venice, and I want to know why you won't come too?"

"Venice?" Lady Maud was surprised. "It's as hot as Tophet now, and full of mosquitoes. Why in the world do you want to take them there?"

"Well," answered the American, taking plenty of time over the monosyllable, "I didn't exactly mean to stay there more than a few minutes. I've bought a pretty nice yacht since I saw you, and she's there, eating her head off, and I thought you might all come along with me on her and go home that way, or somewhere, and what I want you to decide right away is whether you'll come, provided they will—for I don't suppose you and I could go mooning around in the yacht by ourselves."

"And I don't suppose," returned Lady Maud, mimicking him ever so little, "that if 'they' decide not to come, you will have time for a long cruise."

"Now that's not fair," objected the American. "I didn't intend to put it in that way. Anyhow, will you come if they do? That's the point."

"Really, it depends a little on who 'they' are. Do you mean only Margaret and that nice old friend of her—Mrs. Patmore, isn't she? I never met her."

"Rushmore," said Van Torp, correcting her. "Then there's the Russian—Count Kralinsky. Ever hear that name?"

"Never. It sounds Polish."

"He might be anything. Sometimes I'm absolutely sure he's a man I used to know out west when I was on the ranch, and then again there's something quite different about him. Something about his legs or his eyes, I can't tell which. I don't quite make him out."

They reached the hotel, and Van Torp went off promptly, leaving Margaret to take Lady Maud upstairs and introduce her to Mrs. Rushmore.

An hour later the two young women were together in Margaret's room, while Potts was unpacking for Lady Maud in the one that had been secured for her in spite of all sorts of difficulties.

The prima donna was sitting at her toilet table, turned away from the glass, and Lady Maud occupied the only possible chair there was, a small, low easy chair, apparently much too small for such a tall woman, but less uncomfortable than it looked.

"Are you going on Mr. Van Torp's yacht?" asked Lady Maud suddenly. "He spoke to me about it on the way from the station, and asked me to come, in case you accept."

"I don't know. Will you go if I do? That might make a difference."

Lady Maud did not answer at once. She wished that she knew how matters had gone between Margaret and Van Torp during the last few days, for she sincerely wished to help him, now that she had made up her mind as to Logotheti's real character. Nevertheless, her love of fair play made her feel that the Greek ought to be allowed a chance of retrieving himself.

"Yes," she said at last, "I'll go, on one condition. At least, it's not a condition, my dear; it's only a suggestion, though I hate to make one. Don't think me too awfully cheeky, will you?"

Margaret shook her head, but looked very grave.

"I feel as if I were getting into a bad scrape," she said, "and I shall be only too glad of any good advice. Tell me what I had better do."

"I must tell you something else first as a continuation of my letter, for all sorts of things happened after I wrote it."

She told Margaret all that has been already narrated, concerning the news that Baraka had been set at large on Logotheti's sworn statement that the ruby was not his, and that he had seen it in her possession in Paris; and she told how she had tried to find him at his lodgings, and had failed, and how strangely the leather-faced secretary's answers had struck her, and how she had seen Baraka's gloves and stick in Logotheti's hall; and finally she said she had taken it into her head that Logotheti had spirited away the Tartar girl on his yacht, which, as every one in town had known through the papers, was at Cowes and in commission. For Logotheti, in his evidence, had explained his absence from the police court by the fact that he had been off in the Erinna for two days, out of reach of news.

Margaret's face grew darker as she listened, for she knew Lady Maud too well to doubt but that every word was more than scrupulously true; and the deduction was at least a probable one. She bit her lip as she felt her anger rising again.

"What do you advise me to do?" she asked, in a sullen tone.

"Telegraph to Logo and prepay an answer of 20 words. Telegraph to his rooms in St. James' place and at the same time to his house in Paris. Telegraph anything you like that really needs an immediate reply. That's the important thing. If he does not answer within 21 hours—say 36 at the most—he is either on his yacht or hiding. Excuse the ugly word, dear—I don't think of any other. If you are afraid of the servants, I'll take the message to the telegraph office and send it for you. I suppose you have some way of signing which the clerks don't recognize—if you sign at all."

Margaret leaned back in her chair in silence. After a few seconds she turned towards the glass, rested her chin on her folded knuckles, and seemed to be consulting her own reflexion. It is a way some women have. Lady Maud glanced at her from time to time, but said nothing. At last the prima donna rose with a sweep that upset the light chair behind her, one of those magnificent sweeps that look so well on the stage and are a little too large for a room. She got her blotter and pen from a shelf, brought it back to the toilet table, picked up the chair in a very quiet and sensible way, as if she had never been on the stage in her life, and sat down to write.

"I shall take your advice, dear," she said, opening the blotter and placing a large sheet of paper in the right position.

Lady Maud rose and went to the window, where she stood looking out while Margaret wrote her message.

"You needn't write it out twice," she said, without turning round. "Just put 'duplicate message' and both addresses."

"Yes. Thank you."

Margaret was already writing. Her message said it was absolutely necessary that she should see Logotheti directly, and bade him answer at once, if he could come to Bayreuth; if important financial affairs hindered him, she herself would return immediately to Paris to see him.

She was careful to write "financial" affairs, for she would not admit that any other consideration could delay his obedience. While she was busy she heard, but scarcely noticed, an unearthly hoot from a big motor car that was passing before the hotel. There must have been something in the way, for the thing hooted again almost at once, and then several times in quick succession, as if a gigantic brazen ass were beginning to bray just under the window. The noises ended in a sort of wild, triumphant howl, with a furious puffing, and the motor took itself off, just as Margaret finished.

She looked up and saw Lady Maud half bent, as if she had been struck; she was clinging with one hand to the flimsy chintz curtain, and her face was as white as a sheet. Margaret started in surprise, and rose to her feet so suddenly that she upset the chair again.

"What has happened?" she cried. "Are you ill, dear?"

The delicate color came slowly back to the smooth cheeks, the thoroughbred figure in black drew itself up with elastic dignity, and the hand let go of the curtain.

"I felt a little faint," Lady Maud answered. "Did I frighten you? It was nothing, and it's quite gone, I assure you."

"You looked dreadfully ill for a moment," Margaret said in a tone of concern. "Won't you let me send for something? Tea? Or something iced? I'm sure you have had nothing to eat or drink for hours! How disgracefully thoughtless of me!"

She was just going to ring, but her friend stopped her.

"No—please!" she cried. "I'm all right, indeed I am. The room is a little warm, I think, and I've been shut up in that stuffy train for 30 hours. Have you written your telegram? I'll put on my hat at once, and take it for you. The little walk will do me good. Where is the telegraph? But they can tell me downstairs. Don't bother! Walking always brings me round, no matter what has happened!"

She spoke nervously, in disjointed phrases, in a way not like herself, for there was generally an air of easy calm in all she did, as if nothing really mattered in the least, save when she was deeply interested; and hardly anything interested her now except what she had made her work. In all that belonged to that, she was energetic, direct and quick.

Margaret was sure that something was wrong, but let her go, since she insisted, and Lady Maud folded the written message and went to the door. Just as she was going to turn the handle Margaret spoke to her.

"If I have no answer to that by to-morrow afternoon I shall accept Mr. Van Torp's invitation."

"I hope you will go," Lady Maud said with sudden decision, "for if you do, I can go with you, and I'm dying to see the new yacht!"

Margaret looked at her in surprise, for it was only a little while since she had seemed much less ready to join the party, and only willing to do so, if at all, in order to please her friend. She saw Margaret's expression.

"Yes," she said, as if in explanation, "I've been thinking it over in the last few minutes, and I want very much to go with you all. I shall be back in less than an hour."

"An hour?"

Straight and tall in her mourning, Lady Maud went down the stairs of the hotel. As she was going out the hall porter raised his cap, and she stopped a moment and asked him which was the nearest way to the telegraph office. He stood on the doorstep and pointed in the direction she was to follow as he answered her question.

"Can you tell me," she asked, "whose motor car it was that passed about ten minutes ago, and made so much noise?"

"Count Kralinsky's, my lady," the porter answered; for he spoke good English, and had the true hotel porter's respect for the British aristocracy abroad.

"He was the gentleman with the big fair beard, I suppose? Yes, thank you."

She went out into the dull street, with its monotonous houses, all two stories high, and she soon found the telegraph office and sent Margaret's duplicate message. She had not glanced at it, but the clerk asked her questions about words that were not quite clearly written, and she was obliged to read it through. It occurred to her that it was couched in extremely peremptory terms, even for an offended bride-elect; but that was none of her business.

She resumed her walk, not knowing whither and not caring, always at the same even pace, and hardly noticing the people who passed her, of whom a good many were in two-horse cabs, some in queer little German motors, and a few on foot; and she thought, and wondered, and tried to understand, but could not. At all events, she was glad to be alone; she was glad not to have even Van Torp with her, and she was quite indifferent to the fact that time was passing, and that Margaret was beginning to wonder where in the world she was.

"My dear child," Mrs. Rushmore said, when the prima donna expressed her surprise, "those English people are all alike, when they are once out on a road by themselves. They must take a long walk. They never know when to stop walking. I cannot understand what they can see in it. Perhaps you will kindly touch the bell, my dear, and I will send the tea away. It can be brought fresh for her when she comes. Thank you, Margaret. But she will not come in till it is just time to dress for dinner. Mark my words, my child, the countess will be late for dinner. All English people are. Have you heard from Mons. Logotheti to-day?"

"Not to-day," Margaret answered, repressing a little start, for she was as near to being nervous as she ever was, and she was thinking of him just then, and the question had come suddenly.

"I think it is time you heard from him," said Mrs. Rushmore, her natural severity asserting itself. "I should think that after those very strange stories in the papers he would write to you and explain, or come himself. By the by, perhaps you will kindly pass me the Herald, my dear. What did you once tell me was the name of his yacht?"

"The Erinna," Margaret answered, handing Mrs. Rushmore the sheet.

"Exactly! I think that means the 'Fury.'"

"He told me it was the name of a Greek poetess," Margaret observed.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

"What Has Happened?" She Cried. "Are You Ill, Dear?"

Peculiar Family Reunion.

There is a man in New York, a brilliant writer, who, twice divorced, is now living happily with his third wife. Last year he gave a dinner to his three wives, and he said it was really a delightful reunion.

The KITCHEN CABINET

JUST being happy is a fine fine thing to do:
Looking on the bright side rather than the blue;
the blue;
Sad or sunny musing
Is largely in the choosing,
And just being happy is brave work and true.

Cooking for Two.

Almost all housekeepers start out in getting experience in the culinary art in cooking for two, but we find few recipes for such a small family. The proportions in all ordinary recipes are made for a family of five or six and the young cook is often at a loss, when dividing the recipe, to get correct proportions.

The following recipes may be safely followed:

Bread.

Take one-fourth of a cupful of hot milk, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of lard, one-fourth of a yeast cake dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of lukewarm water. Put into a bowl and add the yeast. When the milk is a little cooled, so that the yeast plant will not be killed, add flour enough to handle, then knead until the dough is elastic to the touch. Put back into the warm bowl which has been scraped and buttered, and let rise closely covered until double its bulk. Now knead again and make into a loaf, let rise again until double in bulk, then bake in a moderate oven.

A perfect loaf of bread should be well rounded over the top, a golden brown in color, a crisp, tender crust, fine crumb and good flavor.

Muffins.

Cream one tablespoonful of butter, add half a tablespoonful of sugar, one-half a beaten egg if large, or a whole one if small, five tablespoonfuls of flour sifted with a pinch of salt and a half teaspoonful of baking powder.

A Few Don'ts.

Don't forget to dry the wash boiler after using it, as if rusty it spoils the clothes.

Don't put hot food into the refrigerator.

Don't let the fires burn with the dampers open and heat all going up the chimney.

AH WITH the coffee all my years provide!
Its chemicals may turn me
green inside,
But all my fears are scattered to the winds
When o'er the fragrant pot I can preside.
—Olive Green.

Generalities.

The juice of stewed cranberries with the addition of lemon and sugar to taste makes a delicious drink.

Cover plaster of paris figures with a thick coating of starch and water, let it dry on and the dirt will brush off with the starch.

Freshen velvet by holding it over a steaming teakettle or a hot iron covered with a wet cloth. This raises the pile. If the velvet needs cleaning use gasoline.

Delicious sandwiches may be made of creamed cheese and chopped red peppers, the canned variety.

Household Hints.

Any piece of woolen wrung out of gasoline makes a good duster, but care must be used to keep it away from open fires.

Make croutons for soup by cutting stale bread a half inch thick, butter it well on both sides, cut in half-inch squares and brown in the oven.

In serving a poached egg place it on a circle of bread sauted in a little butter for a change from toast.

Foods that have strong odors, that may fill the laundered clothing with odors, should not be cooked on ironing days.

Groceries, as well as meats, should be kept in a cool, dry place.

Jot down on a slate or tablet the articles getting low in the kitchen, so that the supply may be kept up.

"What is it?" queried the tired listener.

"Well, I didn't study for the ministry, and now I'll be hanged if there hasn't been a big fund left for poor preachers."—Boston Herald.

Prayers for King Edward.

Bishop Green, of Ballarat, complains that there is too much praying for the king. "While Anglicans are loyal, we do not want to pray for his majesty five times in the course of one service. It hardly seems loyal to imply that King Edward needs so much praying for.—London Opinion.

Willing to Let Him Draw

Artist Withdrew Complaint Against Fellow Member After He Had Heard Him Talk.

Pellegrini was an artist with an exceedingly liberal vacabulary, upon which he would draw freely for the edification of the Beefsteak club, of which he was a member. There was one fellow member of the club, says J. C. Carr in a book called "Some Eminent Victorians," who was wont to entertain the table with little impromptu sketches, which he executed with a certain degree of facility.

This innocent display of artistic power offended Pellegrini, who, possibly moved by a measure of jealousy, that any one should encroach upon his special province, insisted with some vehemence that a club was not the place for such exercises.

"I like the boy," he said to me one evening, "and when he talk, I listen, but 'tis pity he draw."

It was only a few evenings later that I entered the room and found the young friend who had been the subject of Pellegrini's rebuke absorbing the entire conversation of the crowded table. Pellegrini was present, and I could see that he was growing restive under the artist's unceasing flow of conversation.

In a momentary pause he turned to me, and in an audible whisper delivered this laconic judgment:

"Joe, I 'ave made big mistake. 'Tis better he draw."—Youth's Companion.

Little Waldo Surprised.

Suddenly the summer man gave a start and hastily removed his arm from the waist of the summer girl.

"W-what's the trouble, Fred?" she asked in alarm.

"Why," he replied, nervously, "those boarders up in the beach hotel have been training opera glasses on us for the last ten minutes. I bet they are saying this is the funniest comic opera they ever witnessed."

The summer girl smiled.

"Don't worry, Fred, you can depend on it that I don't think it is comic opera."

"And what do you think it is, dearest?"

"Grand."

And after that the ripples of mirth that drifted down from the hotel veranda failed to disturb them.

The situation in congress seems to be that both sides won and nobody is satisfied.

Mr. Roosevelt's admirers seem confident that his popularity can survive even the late ovation or deal.

The atmosphere is clear and the Republicans are again together.—St. Paul Pioneer Press. Under what flag?

King Menelik is dying again. He reminds us of the story of the man who wished his wife would "get well or somethin'."

The First district Democrats have agreed upon Judge Buck of Winona as their candidate for congress to make the race against James A. Tawney.

The recent political straws do not show a great deal of comfort to Republican candidates in Minnesota. When the returns are in from the heart of insurgency some of the idols are apt to be shattered.

Champ Clark thinks the only way to get rid of Cannonism is to elect a Democratic congress. After looking at the proposition up one side and down the other one is forced to the conclusion that Champ's logic is good.

The John A. Johnson fund, amounting now to $22,000, has been turned over to the State University regents, and has been accepted. It will probably be increased to $30,000. During her lifetime Mrs. Johnson is to receive the interest, and at her death the fund will be used in endowing a John A. Johnson scholarship.

Public Examiner Anton Schaefer charges that the Great Northern Railway has been dodging the payment of the four per cent gross earnings tax on part of its property by allowing large arbitrary divisions of revenue to be credited to subsidiary lines outside of the state. Mr. Hill is a thorough believer in conserving his own resources, adds the Winona Independent.

Jesse A. Gregg, a St. Paul jobber, says the insurgents are worse than Democrats—they are traitors! But Jesse has always had the disagreeable habit of putting his foot in his mouth. In 1896 he threatened to discharge his traveling men who were espousing Bryan. This eminent gentleman should have lived in an earlier age. He belongs to the era before the Magna Charta and the Declaration of Independence.

William Buchanan, the Republican candidate in the fourteenth Massachusetts district, who was defeated by Eugene N. Foss, the Democratic nominee, had this to say about his defeat: "If the result will serve to convince the Republican leaders at Washington that something must be speedily accomplished in the way of lowering the cost of living, I shall feel that my defeat has not been without value."

Governor Lind strikes a popular chord in saying that "the people of the United States want to be ruled by enlightened statesmanship actuated by the spirit of our institutions. They expect this work to be carried on for the time being by instrumentalities chosen by the Republican party but they are heartily sick of this constant twaddle about what an aggregation of special interests meeting at the Chicago convention said or meant or did not say or did not mean."

A "DOLLAR DINNER."

The Democratic State Central Committee is arranging for the celebration of the birthday of Democracy's patron saint, Thomas Jefferson, by giving a "dollar dinner" at St. Paul on Wednesday evening, April 13, 1910. It is expected that Governor Lind, Congressman Hammond and other prominent orators of the state will respond to toasts, and the affair is calculated to be the "opening gun" of the campaign.

In announcing the date and tentative program for the dinner Chairman Frank A. Day takes occasion to remark:

"Prospects for Democratic victory were never brighter. It is practically conceded that the next Congress will be Democratic, and in the middle west there is a spirit of revolt against the national administration and the delinquencies of the Aldrich-Cannon Congress. Democracy in Minnesota was never more militant and aggressive, nor was there ever a more widespread confidence that Democratic success is certain. It remains for the party workers to don their armor and enter the battle with enthusiasm."

HAMMOND SEES VICTORY.

Representative W. S. Hammond, of the Second district, gives his impressions of the recent revolution in congress, and makes this comment on the defeat of Cannon by the Democrats and insurgents:

"The change made in the personel of the committee on the rules by the taking off of the committee the speaker will be a salutory one. The removal of the speaker is more than an amendment to the rules. It is a protest made effective against the domination of that committee by the speaker, and it indicates that a majority of the members of the house are opposed to his exercise of the power as he has exercised it in the past. The speaker smarting under his defeat challenged the house to remove him from office. It seems to me that the members of the house who have complained for so long a time of his bias and power, and especially those who in their districts have announced themselves as anti-Cannon ought not to have sat silent under the challenge.

"A Democrat offered a resolution declaring a vacancy in the office of speakership and providing for the immediate selection of a new speaker. This resolution was solidly supported by the Democrats, though it in no way indicated from what party or faction in the house the speaker should be taken. A few of the insurgents joined with the Democrats, but a great majority of them united with the regulars and sustained Cannon. It seems clear that the Democrats have gained greatly before the people because they have shown consistency from first to last and have evaded no proposition, but have stood together for the reforms they have contended before the people.

"No explanations, therefore, are necessary so far as they are concerned. Those insurgents who have declared against Cannon and who when opportunity offered, to depose him, rallied to his support, may be able to explain their consitnents, but I am inclined to think that the Democrats and Independent Republicans of the country will approve the course of the Democrats and will call for no explanations from them. I am confident we shall control the next house. Gains will come from those districts represented by insurgent representatives who showed their inconsistency and lack of courage on Saturday."

Cass Lake Times: Ex-president Roosevelt is in such fit condition as to be able to use his own words to "hit the line hard." As the original insurgent it is safe to wager your last dollar that Teddy will be in on the insurgent side of the line which divides the insurgents from the standpatters.

Red Wing Free Press: A falsehood persistently stuck to may finally be taken for the truth. That is probably the object of President Taft in sticking to his original preposterous claim that the Payne-Aldrich tariff law is the best ever, in spite of the fact that nine-tenths of the whole country know better.

Albert Lee Tribune: Wall street alternates between the blue devils and the sanguine optimism of intoxication. It never takes the cool common sense view of the man who has to work for a living.

Cannon Falls Beacon: Had the president shown the same interests in having a proper tariff revision bill formulated and enacted as he is now showing in bringing the factions in congress together for the enactment of his recent recommendations the result might have been different. The inference is that the tariff bill suited the president as well as the interests that dictated it.

BIG CONGRESS IS A GREAT SUCCESS

Conservation Meeting at St Paul Awakens Statewide Interest in Important Subjects

Proceedings of Third and Fourth Days of the Congress.

GOOD ROADS MOVEMENT.

The third day's session of the congress was notable for many things. The Minnesota Roadmakers' association was organized and in addition an all day good roads section was held, with meetings in the morning, afternoon and evening. The opening session was called to order by Governor Eberhart and addresses were made by a list of speakers with expert knowledge not only on roads in this part of the country, but also thoroughly versed in the roadmaking history of the world. Maps, diagrams, photographs and stereopticon views were used to illustrate the addresses.

Other states were represented at the good roads section, many visitors having come from North and South Dakota and Wisconsin to take in the meeting.

As a further step in the work of applying the principles of conservation discussed at the congress organizations were formed by county and farm executives, who will have it in their power to direct the employment of scientific farming and administrative methods and a movement was started to organize county conservation committees, with the probability of frequent local meetings between the adjournment of this and the convening of the next congress.

WOMEN TAKE ACTIVE PART.

Women figured prominently in the third day's session of the general section of the congress, the discussions relating to agricultural and industrial education, pure food, public health and sanitation. At a special session in the afternoon "Woman's Part in Conservation" was discussed by a number of women speakers.

Two speakers of national reputation participated in the day's programme, Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the bureau of chemistry in the department of agriculture, and D. J. Crosby, specialist in agricultural education.

Dr. Wiley spoke during the afternoon on "Pure Food in Its Relation to Public Health and Conservation." As one of the foremost authorities on questions of pure food Dr. Wiley's message to the congress was listened to with interest.

Mr. Crosby has been connected with the department of agriculture for seven years. He came from Washington especially to address the congress.

Professor E. R. Denfeld, superintendent of the Duluth public schools, made an address upon "Education and Current Business and Their Relation to each other," and George F. Howard and D. D. Mayne of the agricultural college handled the subject from the viewpoint of the educator.

DR. WILEY MADE A HIT.

For straight common sense, unquestioned sincerity and profound grasp of his subject Dr. Wiley's address stood apart from all others delivered before the convention. He did not aim to please his audience; he aimed to instruct them. With a wealth of information at his command relating to pure food he presented in concise, logical and convincing manner the message that he came from Washington to deliver to the people of Minnesota.

Many an old notion regarding quality and quantity of food received a severe jolt from the pure food expert. "Some people claim to boil milk to purify it," he said. "Nonsense. If milk is pure it does not need purifying. Maybe boiling dirt purifies it, but I'd just as soon have my dirt raw."

Dr. Wiley swept aside the old theory that one should leave the table hungry. "Eat a little more than you need," he said. "You never can tell what will happen. I have never had any time for an engineer who would start on a trip with just enough coal to carry him through if nothing unforseen occurred.

"It is not the underfed men and nations, but the men and nations who eat, that are in the vanguard of progress. The English, the Americans and the Germans are good eaters and they lead the world."

LAST DAY'S SESSION.

"Forestry and Mines" was the subject of the morning session, with W. O. McGonagle, president of the Duluth, Missabe and Northern railroad, in the chair. The 2 o'clock session was on "Drainage and Water Powers," the 4 o'clock session on "Better Farming in Minnesota" and in the evening Governor Eberhart presided over the closing session, the programme for which was miscellaneous, and included a special address by Mrs. Perry Starkweather, assistant state labor commissioner in charge of women and children, on "The Welfare of the Child." Mrs. Starkweather had much to say about child labor and living conditions in homes where there are no children and the women of St. Paul turned out in force to hear her. Other addresses on the final day's programme were as follows:

"Forestry and Conservation in Minnesota," J. E. Rhodes, president Minnesota Forestry association.

"Practical Forestry," R. H. Campbell, chief of Canadian forestry bureau, Ottawa, Can.

"Minnesota's Soil and Mineral Resources," Dr. Charles R. Van Rise, president University of Wisconsin.

"Water Wealth," Dean Francis C. Shenehon, University of Minnesota.

"Power Development and Control and Waterways Improvements in Minnesota," Colonel J. H. Davidson, chairman Minnesota waterways commission.

"What Drainage Is Doing for Minnesota Agricultural Lands," George T. Ralph, state drainage engineer.

"Northern Minnesota, a New Empire," Professor Thomas Shaw.

"Farm Drainage," Professor John T. Stewart, State Agricultural college.

"Association and Mutual Benefit," L. E. Potter, Springfield, vice president of congress.

GOVERNOR'S CLOSING TALK.

"I owe it to the people of this state to briefly state how this congress came about. It had a modest start beset by many difficulties. The first story was written by a reporter of a Minneapolis paper. The other papers took up the idea and it gathered force. The newspaper reporters have worked long hours and others have labored, but none so faithfully nor as long as the reporters.

GOVERNOR EBERHART.

"I want to thank the members of the various committees, the Commercial clubs of Minnesota, the members of the national guard, the faculty of the University of Minnesota, the people of St. Paul and the speakers who have given us such rare instruction on behalf of the congress. I want to thank you for attending this congress, the results of which will be greater than we can anticipate. Its proceedings will be published in full and its work spread more and more. We hope that when it reaches the readers they will appreciate their duties and their responsibilities as citizens. The congress will mean much to the future development of the state, we are sure.

"A year from now we will probably meet in Minneapolis to continue the work so auspiciously begun. I will bring the meeting to a close by wishing that some of the things you have heard will remain with you as an inspiration to the highest, strongest and purest womanhood and manhood."

Passing in review the four days devoted to the congress the question foremost in the public mind is "What is the real great benefit that will result from the congress?" The answers to this question are varied. Each delegate looks at it from his personal viewpoint, but all agree that not alone in one but in many things the congress has benefited the state and the people of the state.

S.S.S. CURES OLD SORES

Every old sore is an infected spot on the flesh, kept open by constant drainage of impure blood into the place. One of the principal constituents of blood is plasma, a healing property. Where the circulation is pure this element of the blood, which is of a glutinous or sticky nature, performs the necessary work in healing all sores, wounds and lacerations. It does this by sticking or joining the parts together, while nature causes a knitting of the tissues and solidifies the place.

This healing property is frequently destroyed by impure accumulations in the blood, and this vital fluid not only loses its power to heal, but becomes a source of irritation and disease to any open sore or ulcer on the body. Constantly it discharges its morbid matter into the place, and gradually it causes the infection to spread, and the sore enlarges. The morbid matter in the blood comes from different causes. A long spell of debilitating sickness, which breeds disease germs in the system, the retention of the refuse matters of the body because of a sluggish condition of the eliminative members, a continued malarial state of the system, inherited bad blood, etc., are usually responsible.

CURED OF EATING SORE.

Dear Sirs:—I was suffering greatly from a sore on my left breast, which had begun to eat, and at times deep, shooting pains would pass through it, and the ulcer was discharging yellow and rather offensive matter. I consulted physicians, but their treatment did not benefit me very much. My condition seemed hopeless, and I had almost despaired of getting well. I knew that the disease was hereditary in my case, as an only sister, my mother and two of her sisters had died of Cancer of the breast. After I had finished the first bottle of S. S. S. I felt some better, so continued it until I was cured.

S. S. S. heals sores and ulcers in the very simplest way. It just goes into the circulation, and removes the impurities and polluted matter that are the means of keeping the ulcer open; then the sore is bound to heal. S.S.S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and not only does it cleanse the circulation, but it adds every necessary property to it to promote good health. It is of the very greatest tonic value, and those who have been weakened and run down by the constitutional drainage of an old sore will find it the very remedy needed. S.S.S. does not simply cause a scab to come over an old sore, but beginning at the bottom it heals the place permanently by building new tissue and filling in the place with firm, healthy flesh. Quaker Oats is the best of all foods; it is also the cheapest. When such men as Prof Fisher of Yale University and Sir James Crichton Browne, LL.D., F.R.S. of London spend the best part of their lives in studying the great question of the nourishing and strengthening qualities of different foods, it is certain that their advice is absolutely safe to follow.

Professor Fisher found in his experiments for testing the strength and endurance of athletes that the meat eaters were exhausted long before the men who were fed on such food as Quaker Oats. The powers of endurance of the non-meat eaters were about eight times those of the meat eaters.

Sir James Crichton Browne says—eat more oatmeal, eat plenty of it and eat it frequently. 59

A LITTLE THING
Changes the Home Feeling.

Coffee blots out the sunshine from many a home by making the mother, or some other member of the household, dyspeptic, nervous and irritable. There are thousands of cases where the proof is absolutely undeniable. Here is one.

A Wis. mother writes:

"I was taught to drink coffee at an early age, and also at an early age became a victim to headaches, and as I grew to womanhood these headaches became a part of me, as I was scarcely ever free from them.

"About five years ago a friend urged me to try Postum. I made the trial and the result was so satisfactory that we have used it ever since.

"My husband and little daughter were subject to bilious attacks, but they have both been entirely free from them since we began using Postum instead of coffee. I no longer have headaches and my health is perfect."

If some of these tired, nervous, irritable women would only leave off coffee absolutely and try Postum they would find a wonderful change in their life. It would then be filled with sunshine and happiness rather than weariness and discontent. And think what an effect it would have on the family, for the mood of the mother is largely responsible for the temper of the children.

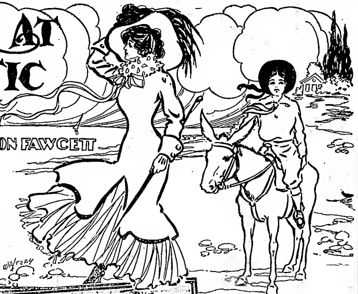
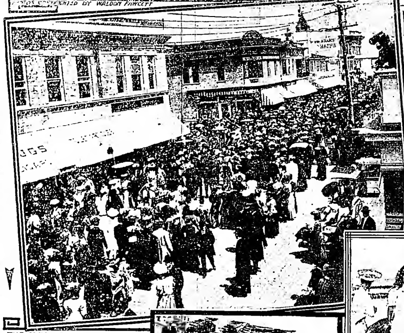
EASTER AT ATLANTIC CITY

By WALDON FAWCETT



DIFFERENT localities throughout the United States have varied forms of Easter observance, each novel and distinctive in its way, but it is safe to say that the most spectacular of these events is the great Easter parade on the board walk at Atlantic City. Each American city, to be sure, has its Easter parade along about church time on the joyous morning, but none of these, not even the famous show of fashion on Fifth avenue, New York, can approach in magnitude and splendor the informal procession in honor of the spring holiday at the seaside



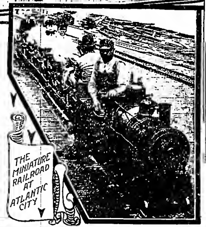
THE GREAT EASTER PARADE AT ATLANTIC CITY

It is no commonplace sight, this panorama of 150,000 people, all attired in their most impressive raiment, tramping up and down an esplanade five miles long to see and be seen.

Perhaps, if you haven't been initiated, you raise your eyebrows at the thought of Atlantic City as an Easter resort. We are wont to think of seashore resorts as bleak places in winter, with biting winds sweeping over the sand stretches and whipping mournfully the tattered remnants of last season's ice cream signs. Surely no person bent on enjoying an Easter vacation would go elsewhere then to a southern resort—certainly not farther north than Old Point Comfort, at any rate. That logic is passing, however, for all that it was very well in its way and sounds plausible even today. The people of the eastern part of the United States have come to accept Atlantic City generally as the pre-eminent Easter mecca and the pleasure loving residents of the middle west and the far west are gradually taking the same view, although they had long been accustomed to recognize it only as a summer paradise and the middle west to this day reserves its main pilgrimage for August, when one may see in bathing at one time as many people as reside in the state of Wyoming.

Just what converted Atlantic City from a summer playground into an all-the-year resort, with especial fascinations at Eastertide, is difficult to determine, although the residents of this pleasure metropolis ascribe it all to their discovery that the Gulf stream comes nearer to the coast off Atlantic City than at any other place north of Florida and thus moderates the temperature and softens the ocean breezes in a degree not enjoyed elsewhere. Candor compels the confession that there have been Easter Sundays when Atlantic City presented a decidedly chilly aspect out of doors, and even under the best conditions most of the women in the Easter parade wear furs, but as a rule the air is bracing and mild enough to encourage lengthy constitutionals. Incidentally it may be remarked that the luxurious rolling chairs which constitute a distinctive feature of life at Atlantic are not so well patronized at Easter as in dog days. Easter weather is of a kind to encourage walking and the chairs which are abroad at this season are housed in with glass.

The student of human nature—and there is no better place in the world for such study—instinctively draws contrasts between the Easter throng and the summer vacation crowd at Atlantic City. In July and August, when the city by the sea is entertaining some 200,000 visitors a day, this whirlpool of humanity is filled for the most part with wage earners and salaried folk and their families who can afford but one vacation a year and elect to enjoy it here, tarrying beside the sea for a week or ten days or two weeks.



THE MINIATURE RAILROAD AT ATLANTIC CITY

A FAVORITE AMUSEMENT OF THE LITTLE FOLKS

At Easter, on the other hand, the assemblage at Atlantic City is recruited largely from the wealthy and leisure classes—it is the rendezvous of fashion at this period, just as are Newport and Bar Harbor in midsummer.

For all that the influx at Easter does not equal that when the summer excursion business is at flood tide, almost all of Atlantic City's one thousand hotels and boarding houses are open to receive the spring merrymakers who pour in at the rate of 300 carloads a day for several days before Easter. What the Easter invaders lack in numbers they make up in spending power and this insures them a double welcome on the great amusement highway where the opportunities of retail trade are such that as much as $3,000 a year rental is charged for a tiny store room. That the Easter rush seaward means such a golden harvest for the hotel keepers and merchants at the Brighton of America is all the more significant when it is taken into consideration that many of the Easter visitors come only for the "week end"—that is, for the interval from Friday afternoon to Monday morning.

Atlantic City at Eastertide is the board walk and the board walk is Atlantic City. In the summer the great bathing beach is, of course, the prime attraction for many of the visitors, but nobody cares to indulge in a dip in old ocean at Easter unless, mayhap, it be some venturesome individual in quest of notoriety. This being the case, the board walk becomes the center of attraction and right well does it meet the responsibility. Following the example of Atlantic City, almost every seaside community has erected a board walk, but the one at Atlantic City is in a class by itself. It is upward of five miles long, is 40 feet wide throughout its main section and cost more than a quarter of a million dollars.

On the one hand this board walk affords promenaders an unobstructed view of the sea, while on the other the marine esplanade is lined with hundreds of restaurants, amusement places of every imaginable kind and the most fascinating shops in America. Interspersed at frequent intervals are art auction rooms. A large proportion of the visitors to Atlantic City are women and of course no woman can resist the temptation of real bargains—a fact of which the wily Japs who conduct these auction emporiums are manifestly well aware. Aside from the never-ending procession of variegated humanity, unlimited free amusement is provided by the picturesque "barkers," the fakirs, the street musicians and the sand sculptors who line the board walk. Finally great amusement piers of steel construction—each, in effect, an "annex" of the board walk—extend seaward from the beach a third of a mile or more and afford visitors all the sensations of life on an ocean liner save the seasickness. On these piers are the great music halls and concert auditoriums, where are held the popular dances for which Atlantic City is famous.

RESURRECTION.

And at its summons, lo, a glorious dawn!
To countless joys rock, field and hill give birth,
And myriad triumphs in a breath are born.

Old winter's woe, like mist, hath rolled away
And over all a rose-hued splendor glows;
Love, pleasure, hope—as flowers—adorn the day;
Ecstatic peace in every streamlet flows.

O'erfilled with promise; burdened with delight;
A noble purpose in each hour that rolls;
A precious treasure in each moment's flight.

O magic wand! O faithful hand and true!
We give thee praise and gratitude for this—
Thy touch hath quickened blood and brain anew

STRANGE EASTER RITES.

In no corner of this whimsical old world of ours can there be found more naive traditions of Eastertide than those treasured in the heart of the Macedonian race, on the border between Europe and Asia.

Even before the 40 days' fast is quite over, the rejoicing that is to flower full-blown at Easter, begins, crocuswise, to push its bright way upward through the gloom of abstinence and vigil, says a writer in Housekeeper. On Palm Sunday, in little bands of three and four, the "Palm Maidens," each flourishing a festive gold-embroidered handkerchief, go from house to house singing their happy carols.

Holy Thursday, radiant with red sashes from every balcony—fluttering symbols of the brightness of the spring—is the great egg-dyeing day. With the first egg dyed the fond mother forms the sign of the cross upon the face and neck of her dear, wee nestling, saying: "Mayest thou grow as red as this egg and strong as a stone." Then gently she places it beside the icon of the Virgin where it remains during the coming year—perhaps for a tender reminder to the holy image of the wish that the earthly mother has just uttered that the divine mother may grant its fulfillment.

At 12 o'clock Easter even a midnight mass is celebrated. The Gospel is read in the churchyard "beneath the silent stars." There follows the joyous hymn "Christ Is Risen"—the glad outburst of firearms, the clattering tongues of bells. The priest, holding up a lighted candle, bids all "Come and receive light," and in happy confusion the throng lights its candles.

With these little flickering torches in their eager hands, they turn to the church. The doors are closed and locked. Loudly they knock, their voices raised in solemn chant:

"Lift the gates, O ye rulers of ours, and ye eternal gates be lifted, for there will enter Christ, the King of Glory!"

A voice within demands: "Who is this King of Glory?"

And the answer breaks forth exultantly: "He is the Lord strong and powerful. He is the Lord mighty in war!"

Home from the service, many slip red eggs under their sleeping children's pillows that when the little ones awake Easter morning they may discover that Paschalia, the female personification of Easter, has surprised the household with a fairy visit.

OLDEST STREET IN AMERICA

Government Is to Build Postoffice on Historic Ground of Plymouth, Massachusetts.

Plymouth, Mass., is about to have a public building built by the government for a postoffice and custom house, and the lot selected is on a historic site at the corner of Leyden street and Main street extension, the oldest street in America.

All the property in this locality is historical, as this was the first street laid out by the Pilgrims, and the only street in America dating back to that time, that is as it was in the early days. The whole of this side of the street, comprising seven acres, on January 2, 1637, came into possession of one James Cole, as the land was granted to him by the court, "to belong to his dwelling house."

The land, part of which will be occupied by the building, belonged at one time to Elder William Brewster, and nearby stood his house.

This house abounded in many anecdotes, and when Gen. Goodwin lived there, at the time of the revolutionary war, he entertained many famous generals of his time.

On the corner of the Baptist church lot is the famous Elder Brewster spring from which excursionists in the summer stop and drink, and it is probable that more people from different parts of the world have drunk from this historic spring than any other similar place in the United States.

Showing World's Progress.

The average Frenchman of to-day can at a smaller price have much better wine than the wealthy Frenchman of the fifteenth or sixteenth century, and this is made possible by the fact that wine is nowadays kept largely in bottles, while in the past only casks were used. Even at the table of Louis XV. wine was rarely served in bottles.

"Now!" snapped the messenger boy with a pout. "Let him stay there and get aired. That blooming actress hires me two hours every day to air her blooming kihoodle, and I want him to get enough of it."

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Need Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brookfield, Mo.—"Two years ago I was unable to do any kind of work and only weighed 118 pounds. My trouble dates back to the time that women may expect nature to bring on them the Change of Life. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made me feel much better, and I have continued its use. I am very grateful to you for the good health I am now enjoying."—Mrs. SARAH LOUSIGNONT, 414 S. Livingston Street, Brookfield, Mo.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills—inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

For Lame Back

This liniment takes the place of massage and is better than sticky plasters. It penetrates—without rubbing—through the skin and muscular tissue right to the bone, quickens the blood, relieves congestion, and gives permanent as well as temporary relief.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. JAMES C. LEE, of 1100 9th St., S.E., Washington, D.C., writes: "Thirty years ago I fell from a scaffold and seriously injured my back. I suffered terribly at times; from the small of my back all around my stomach was just as if I had been beaten with a club. I used every plaster I could get with no relief. Sloan's Liniment took the pain right out, and I can now do as much ladder work as any man in the shop, thanks to

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. J. P. EVANS, of Mt. Airy, Ga., says: "After being afflicted for three years with rheumatism, I used Sloan's Liniment, and was cured sound and well, and am glad to say I haven't been troubled with rheumatism since. My leg was badly swollen from my hip to my knee. One-half a bottle took the pain and swelling out."

Sloan's Liniment has no equal as a remedy for Rheumatism, Neuralgia or any pain or stiffness in the muscles or joints.

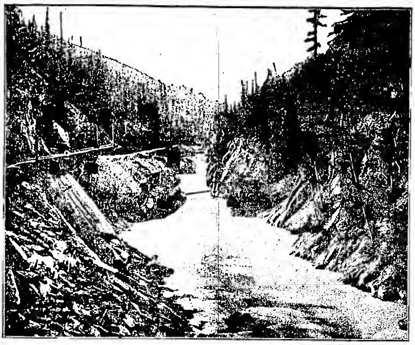
SCENE OF SNOWSLIDE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA



NINETY-TWO people were buried in the most disastrous snowslide ever known on the line of the Canadian Pacific railroad. The terrible avalanche occurred in Beaver creek canyon in the Selkirk mountains. The canyon leads to Rogers pass from the east. Beyond the pass a few miles the track meets the Illecillewaet river. In Beaver creek canyon the mountains rise to many hundred feet above the track. Through Rogers pass, and west of the divide the road passes through several miles of snow sheds, but on the east slope there are practically no sheds for the protection of trains.

FEW WILD PIGEONS

Bird Once Abundant in Michigan Now Almost Exterminated.

Trappers in That State Caught Them in Large Numbers By Use of Nets and a System of Decoys.

South Haven, Mich.—Some thirty-five or forty years ago some of the locality around South Haven was a great lumbering country and to-day in uncleared brush land there are to be seen (reminding one of those early days) firmly imbedded in the ground immense pine stumps, relics of those one-time monarchs of the forest. These stumps will measure in circumference ten or fifteen feet. Old-timers and settlers recall the fact that those pine forests were once the breeding and nesting place of myriads of wild pigeons, that roosted, bred and went unmolested; that they increased in such quantities that when they made a flight they would darken the sky like a black cloud. The younger generation of sportsmen, however, has probably never seen a living specimen of that bird, his acquaintance with pigeons being entirely confined to the plucked specimens of tame pigeons on the stands of the dealers in the market places.

One of the old-timers of the early days who followed the flight of 1878 and was much interested in the pigeon business of that time said that the disappearance of the wild pigeon from its former haunts has established the fact that it is now entirely confined to the wilds of British North America. He followed the roosts and routes of the flights and the last one seen by him in Michigan was in the spring of 1876. The main body of birds disappeared across the Straits of Mackinac, much to the distress of netters.

At Petoskey and its immediate neighborhood in 1878 a flock of pigeons appeared in a considerable number, but not more than a few thousands were seen in one body. The nests in Michigan extended usually for about twenty-eight miles, averaging about two miles wide. The birds usually arrived in two separate bodies; one came directly from the south by land the other following the coast of Wisconsin. The latter body came in from the lake at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. It was a compact mass of pigeons, at least five miles long by one mile wide. In 1878 some Chicago men came over to Michigan and employed 200 men and boys in netting the pigeons. This slaughter, together with advent of the woodmen in the pineries, contributed more than anything else to the annihilation of the wild pigeon in Michigan.

The old-timer, in describing the taking of pigeons in nets, speaks of them as seines, which were so rigged that upon being sprung they fell upon the birds which at the moment were on the ground. There were two methods by which the pigeons were decoyed, one by baiting, whereby a single pigeon, attracted by the food scattered about, called a great number of his fellows, upon whom, when collected in sufficient numbers, the net was sprung.

It was not an an uncommon thing to trap from 300 to 500 pigeons at every cast and, as the casts were numerous, the number taken throughout the day was large. Another method consisted of trapping the pigeons as they flew over the net. That required the use of decoy birds, whose eyes were sewed up and a light weight attached to their legs to prevent them from flying away. These decoys were thrown into the air when a flock was passing by to attract their attention, while trained decoys—that is, pigeons trained to act as if alighting—were worked industriously at the same time. If they brought down the flight the net was sprung at four corners. The captives were taken out and disposed of according to the purpose of the netters. Some were kept alive in coops, while the balance were killed and packed immediately for market. This account applies to the period when flocks of pigeons were large and numerous. The last occasion when nets were profitably used was in 1877.

OLD DEED IS VERY VALUABLE

Document Found, Said to Be Connecting Link of Claim to $400,000,000 Estate.

Toledo, O., Mar. 8.—In rummaging over old papers in a trunk, Harry B. Alexander of New Philadelphia, O., has come across an ancient parchment that proved to be a deed dated June 21, 1751, from agents of Lord Baltimore to William A. Price, and conveying lands now the heart of Baltimore, Md., for the sum of eleven pounds sterling.

This is said to be the connecting link of the claim of the Price heirs to an estate now valued at $400,000,000. Price gave a long lease on the lands, but this lease was destroyed when the British burned the city in 1812.

TAKE DUTCH CENSUS

Enumerators in Holland Have Same Trouble as Elsewhere.

Facts Difficult to Get Because Many Persons Are Apparently Too Stupid to Give Information—Some Amusing Answers.

The Hague.—Cards with questions to be answered for the decennial census of Holland were distributed recently. About 6,000,000 cards were sent out. The experience of the census enumerators, like that in many other countries, is discouraging or amusing, according to the point of view one takes of the matter. It is discouraging if one thinks that education has been compulsory in the Netherlands for many years and that there is so little to show for it. For it is patent that all those 'heads of families" who had to fill in their own census cards and see to it that the other members of their family filled in theirs show a remarkable lack of education and even of plain common sense or intelligence.

Many were absolutely unwilling to fill in their cards; others really could neither read nor write or got hopelessly muddled in the questions and answers. Lots of the cards got lost or too much soiled for use. Some poverty-stricken people asked the enumerators whether they could "get soup on such a card" or whether they could "get work" on it. But few could understand the use of the cards or of the census, although the whole affair had been explained to the children in all the schools, so that they might be able to help their parents in filling out the cards.

Only in those cases where people were really unable, though willing, to do so were the census enumerators allowed to fill out the cards from dictation. Even then it was often difficult to make the people understand what was meant by every question or to get at the correct names, birth and marriage dates, the religious belief or business or employment of the people.

One old woman had answered the question, "What is your principal business or employment?" by writing: "Praying to God for my sovereign and my country." That she truly considered this her principal mission in life could be seen by referring to the census papers of ten years ago, when she had answered the same question in the same way.

Of course, there were many amusing mistakes made—for instance, when a father named as the chief business of his son of 14 years, "being an idiot." Another father gave his little daughter's chief employment as "eating." There seemed to be a good deal of difference of opinion among the people as to who is really the "head of the household." Some households were described as having as many "heads" as "members." In others the husbands had named their wives as the "heads."

Find Hidden Treasure.

Huntington, W. Va.—While digging into a hole to capture a rabbit Grant Bennett and Gordon Farrow of Grayson, Ky., unearthed an old tin canister containing $482 in gold and silver coin. A cabin near the place where the money was found was occupied a quarter of a century ago by John Stevenson, hermit, who died suddenly.

HOW TO DETECT FRESH EGGS

Dr. Wiley Gives House Committee Practical Demonstration on Cold Storage Product.

Washington.—It is easily possible to tell the difference between a fresh egg and a cold storage egg without breaking the shell, and dealers in the District of Columbia who sell stored eggs for "strictly fresh" ones may be prosecuted and convicted, according to statements of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the government's chief chemist, at the "high cost of living" hearing being conducted by a house sub-committee.

Dr. Wiley brought with him a large number of fresh eggs and also some of the cold storage variety. Dropping them into a large vessel of water containing ten per cent. salt solution, the fresh eggs immediately sank to the bottom and the refrigerated ones floated on the surface. When asked how he knew the eggs were fresh Dr. Wiley replied that one of the inspectors had watched the hens lay them the day before.

Busy Woman 113 Years Ola

Mrs. Hester Cordrey Attributes Long Life to Plowing She Did When She Was Young.

Delmar, Del.—Mrs. Hester Cordrey, known as Aunt Hester, celebrated her one hundred and thirteenth birthday at her home here the other day. With her were her four grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Cordrey was born in 1797, nine miles from this town, on a farm, where she lived until she married. She was married twice, but was the mother of only one child. Her health has been remarkable until within the last year. Her eyesight is good and she has lost only one tooth.

When asked to what she attributed her old age, Mrs. Cordrey said:

"When I was a little girl I used to go out and work on the farm like the men. Many days have I plowed all day and come to the barn after dark and milked seven cows. There were only two boys and father, and in those days it was no disgrace for a woman to work, so I used to help out and save hiring extra labor.

"If a girl now was to go out and plant corn or cut wheat she would be considered a slave, but we were praised then for being industrious. If girls these years would do more work and think less of their 'parlor' they would be more healthy and live longer."

Mrs. Cordrey now has a plot of ground which she cultivates yearly unaided.

Famous Game Coming Back?

Nebraska City, Neb.—The first wild turkey seen here in years was killed the other day in the woods between here and Plattsmouth by John Dungan. The men was hunting rabbits, and as he passed a clump of brush he heard the call of a gobbler. As Dungan approached the gobbler flew away with the ease of a swallow. Dungan fired and brought the bird down.

Driven by Hunger to Desperation.

Mrs. Mode had just returned home from the country, to discover her previously well-stocked wardrobe empty. "Good gracious, Herbert," she cried to her husband, "where are all my clothes? And what in the world is that big black patch out on the lawn?" "Nelly," he replied mournfully, "after I had starved for two whole days, you wrote me that the key of the pantry was in the pocket of your bolero. Well, I don't know a bolero from a box-plaited ruffle, and I was desperate, so I took all the things out on the lawn and burned them. Then I found the key among the ashes."—Success Magazine.

A Consolation.

A young woman who had been in the habit of spending her summers in a hill village of Connecticut recently encountered a rural neighbor in a city store.

"How's your wife, Mr. Green?" inquired the young woman graciously.

"Why, don't you know," said Mr. Green, "I lost her three months ago?"

"Oh," said the shocked young woman, "I didn't know. I beg your pardon, Mr. Green, for being so thoughtless."

"Well," said the disconsolate widower soothingly, "it ain't as bad as it might have been. I've got good help."

Easily Explained.

"Not at all," explained the occasional contributor. "I only thought of it last night."

WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:—"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with its Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of $170,000,000.00

Woman's Power Over Man

Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still loves on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R.V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has devised a successful remedy for woman's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. Medicine dealers sell it. No honest dealer will advise you to accept a substitute in order to make a little larger profit.

DOUBLE VISION.

A well known oculist of New York city tells a story of one of his patients who proved rather more than a match for him. The patient was an old fellow from one of the rural counties of the state, fifty years of age or more, who strolled leisurely into the doctor's office and, after taking a mental inventory of the place, remarked that he was afraid that his eyes were "gitting a lettle out o' kilter" and he guessed the doctor had better "take a peek at them." He was seated and, as a preliminary, was invited to look through a prism at a photograph.

"Why, now," said he after "squinting" awhile, "this is curious! I see two photographs. What makes me see like that?"

The oculist, who is something of a humorist and inclined to be jocose with certain of his patients, replied that this phenomenon was certainly very interesting and that, while possibly it indicated some slight abnormality, it yet had its compensating advantages. "With double vision you have a great advantage over me, for example," he continued, smiling; "for you will be able to see twice as many beautiful things in the world as I can. You will have twice as many friends. Your family will be doubled. You will have twice as much real estate and two pocketbooks instead of one."

The old man did not say much in reply, but seemed to be pondering it. Meanwhile the oculist completed his examination, and the time came to receive his fee, which in this case was $10.

Very slowly the old man, still pondering, drew forth a roll of notes and, carefully selecting a five dollar bill, looked hard at it for some moments. Then, proffering it, he said quietly, "Here's your $10, doctor!"

Gems In Verse

EXAMPLE.

WE scatter seeds with careless hand
And dream we ne'er shall see them more,
But for a thousand years
Their fruit appears
In weeds that mar the land
Or healthful store.

THE deeds we do, the words we say,
Into still air they seem to fleet,
We count them ever past,
But they shall last—
In the dread judgment they
And we shall meet.

I CHARGE thee by the years gone by,
For the love's sake of brethren dear,
Keep thou the one true way,
In work and play,
Lest in that world their cry
Of woe thou hear.

—John Keble.

THE STAR IN THE WEST.

I SAW a bright star shining out in the west—
A diadem bound on the brow of the sky—
A beacon, it seemed, in the home of the blest
To guide the poor toilers of earth to a rest
In a land where no sorrow can burden the breast
And all that is true cannot die.

And it seemed that the angels were guarding its fires,
Directing its beams to the mortals below,
Whose hope for a haven of refuge inspires
With courage to carry each cross, though it tires
And burdensome grows ere the moment expires
For release from all bondage and woe.

Beholding with rapture that glorious star
It seemed that I heard the faint rush of a wing
As it passed by my soul and upward afar
It swept to the portals of heaven, ajar,
Swept on to that land where the glorified are Triumphant o'er death and its sting.

And then I remembered that tear be dimmed eyes
Of millions had gazed on those radiant beams
In ages now dead since humanity's ties
Were sundered by man, all regardless of sighs
Of brothers oppressed, and who blindly denies
The love of the one who redeems.

Then sinking adown the far fields of the west
The star that entranced me grew faint to my sight,
Till 'neath the horizon it went to its rest—
But not the sad heart that sank low in my breast—
And left me alone, all unhappy, unblest,
Unshrived in the darkness of night.

In the Matter of the Petition of William C. Hunt and Others for County Ditch No. 47 in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota:

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake, ss.

Whereas, A petition bearing date the 25th day of January, A. D. 1910, signed by William C. Hunt and six others praying for the establishment of a ditch in said County, designated and numbered by the County Auditor as County Ditch No. 47 the route of which is fully described in said petition, together with a proper bond accompanying the same, has been filed with the county auditor of said county; and said county auditor has given due notice of the pendency of said petition, and the said notice has been published and served as by law required; and hearing had on said petition pursuant to said notice; and the said County Board of said County have heretofore duly appointed a competent engineer, towit: C. Now, Therefore, We, the County Board of said County, at a Special session held this day, do hereby appoint Joseph Belair and Gilbert Haavi and Otto Zaiser, three resident freeholders of said county, who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and not of kin to any of the parties known to be interested therein, to be viewers of said proposed work and of the route thereof. The said viewers shall first take an oath to faithfully perform their duties as such viewers; and thereafter, having received a certified copy of the petition for said ditch and of the order appointing them such viewers and of the order of the county Auditor of said County designating the time and place of the first meeting of said viewers, shall meet at the time and place specified in the order of the County Auditor aforesaid and shall proceed to view said proposed work, and the land damaged or benefitted thereby and, having completed said view and examination of said work, shall make and file their report thereof with said county auditor of said county within thirty days from the date of their first meeting. In said report they shall in tabular form give the names of the owners of each tract of land to be benefitted or damaged by said proposed work, the description of each tract of land so benefitted or damaged (said names of owners to be the same as appear on the county tax duplicate of said county, and the description to be given in legal form), and the total number of acres in each of said tracts, the estimated number of acres in each tract of land to be benefitted or damaged (as the case may be), the number of acres added to any tract by the total or partial drainage of any meandered lake, or the change of any water course and the location and value of such added land; the damage if any, to riparian rights pertaining to any tract, and the amount that each tract of land will be benefitted or damaged by the construction of said work. In case said ditch drains, either in whole or in part, any public or corporate road or railroad, or benefits any such road so that the roadbed or traveled track of any such road will be made better by the construction of said ditch, said viewers shall estimate the benefits arising therefrom to said road, roadbeds or railroads, and report said benefits, together with the names of roads and other particulars necessary to identify the corporations, private or public, to be benefitted thereby, and amounts of benefits to each; they shall report as part of such tabular statement the damages awarded to each municipal or other corporation for injury to any road or roadbed, and from the necessary construction and maintenance of any bridge, culverts or other works rendered necessary by the establishment of such ditch, stating the same separately. They shall also report the total estimated benefits in respect to said ditch entire, and branches thereof, if any, and also whether or not, in their opinion, the estimated expense of the construction of said ditch including the damages assessed therefor, is greater than the utility of said proposed ditch; and whether or not said proposed ditch is impracticable for any reason, and if so, stating the reason why it should not be constructed. In making said view and survey of said proposed work and their report thereon, the said viewers shall proceed according to Chapter 230 of the General Laws of 1905, and acts amendatory thereof.

ABOUT THE CENSUS.

All Questions Should be Answered Without Reserve.

The census begins April 15 and must be completed in thirty days.

The enumerators will wear a badge inscribed "United States Census, 1910."

The law requires every adult person to furnish the prescribed information, but also provides that it shall be treated confidentially, so that no injury can come to any person from answering the questions.

The Census Bureau, prior to April 15, will distribute to every farm owner and tenant in this state a blank schedule containing the census questions relative to farm operations and equipment. This should be filled up, if possible, not later than the morning of April 15, but if anyone has been unable to fill it up by that time, he should do it as soon afterwards as he can.

People who do not speak English or who do not understand the schedule completely should get help from others, if possible, in filling up.

The president has issued a proclamation, calling on all citizens to co-operate with the census and assuring them that it has nothing to do with the taxation, army or jury service, compulsory school attendance, regulation of immigration, or enforcement of any law, and that no one can be injured by answering the inquiries.

It is of the utmost importance that the farm census of this state be complete and correct.

Therefore every farm owner and tenant should promptly, fully and accurately fill up the "Advance Farm Schedule" and carefully preserve it for the enumerator when he calls.

Fred Borchers, while in the west two weeks ago, closed a business deal that means that he and his family are to leave Red Lake Falls. Mr. Borchers will locate in Missoula, Montana. He has purchased half a block of ground in a good location in that city upon which location he will erect sheds and establish a lumber yard. The opening of the reservation and other causes are inducing much building in the country tributary to Missoula and consequently in the city also and Mr. Borchers believes that there is an excellent opportunity in the lumber business there. He expects to close out his business interests here so as to be able to leave for the west the last of the month.

LAST MOVE IN THE DELAY GAME

Fight on Erection of the Court House is at an End.

No More Technical Ground on Which to Cause Delay.

The suits in the district court last week, the decision of which determined the county's title to lots purchased for a court house site, have disposed of every technical ground on which the Thief River Falls county seat fighters can make a move to prevent the erection of the court house in Red Lake Falls.

Judge Watts held that the purchase of the lots by Red Lake county was a legal transaction and gave judgment to the vendors for the amount of the purchase price. Since the amount of the purchase price had been prematurely paid, it was held that the judgment had already been satisfied.

And that's all there is to that.

The county now owns a court house site the title to which cannot be questioned, and the county has the money with which to pay for the erection of the building. The contract has already been let and the supreme court has decreed that the county commissioners have acted with authority in providing for the erection of the building.

STATE LAND SALE HERE

State Auditor Iverson Will Sell State Lands Located in This County.

On May 21 State Auditor S. G. Iverson will be in Red Lake Falls and will offer for sale unsold state lands and certain other lands that have reverted to the state by reason of non-payment of interest. Fifteen per cent of the purchase price and interest on the unpaid balance from the date of sale to June 1st 1911 must be paid at the time of the sale. The balance of the purchase money can be paid at any time, in whole or in part, within forty years of the time of the sale; the rate of interest on the unpaid balance of the purchase money will be four per cent per annum, payable in advance on June 1st of each year, provided the principal remains unpaid for ten years; but if the principal is paid before the expiration of ten years from the date of sale, the rate of interest on the unpaid balance of the purchasing money will be five per cent per annum; interest is payable in advance on June 1st of each year.

Holders of certificates on which the interest payments are in default can have their certificates reinstated on payment, before the sale, of the interest in full to date and the penalties thereon, when the lands covered thereby will be withdrawn from sale.

JUDGMENT FOR LARGE AMOUNT

Man Injured at Thief River River Falls Gets Verdict for $1100.

During the last week's session of district court a case that aroused much interest was that of Albert E. Deuchfield vs the Soo Railway company. This was a suit for damages for personal injuries. Mr. Deuchfield while employed as a wiper in the shops at Thief River Falls last fall was very seriously injured. So serious were his injuries that he is yet a very weak man.

The case occupied the attention of the court last Thursday and went to the jury late in the afternoon. It took the jury many hours to arrive at a decision, but at two o'clock Friday morning they reported a verdict of $1100 for the plaintiff.

The plaintiff was represented by Attorney Chas. E. Boughton of this city and the railway company by Attorneys Julius Olson of Warren and Charles Loring of Crookston.

Uncle Sam Insists That Highways be Kept in Good Condition.

Inquiry from the post office department at Washington regarding the condition of the roads over which rural carriers travel has been received at the local post office. A report of conditions is to be made to the department and if it is found that the roads are not in satisfactory condition and improvements are not made the service will be discontinued. The only condition imposed by the government in establishing and maintaining service is that the roads be kept in good condition and it will be to the advantage of patrons to comply with the one condition.

The communication says in part: "The department is not immediately concerned in elaborate road improvements, but in the interest of the best service to the largest number of patrons it must insist upon roads being kept in good repair, the lack of which is usually due to improper drainage and unsuitable grading and surface work, which can be easily and cheaply accomplished by timely work and the regular use of the split-log drag or similar device."

A request made by the department is that patrons paint the boxes and posts to which they are attached a pure white color. The painting will preserve the posts and boxes and if the request as to color is complied with all the boxes will have a uniform color which will serve to identify them as United States mail boxes and will give them a neater and sightlier appearance. It is also suggested that patrons, after painting the boxes and posts, paint their names on the boxes in black box letters about two inches high.

Authority is given to road officials, and they are urged to use their authority, to paint upon the posts but not on boxes which are located at cross roads (but not signs thereto), the names of towns or villages to which the crossroads lead.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that no rubbish shall be burned in back yards within the city limits. The law prohibits such burning and the law will be enforced. All rubbish should be hauled away to a safe place for burning or otherwise disposed of.

PEAT INDUSTRY.

Land Near Fertile Sells For Big Price.

The Peat Fuel Manufacturing Co. today filed a deed with Register of Deeds Thompson for 240 acres of peat bed land near Fertile, the consideration being $60,000. As stated yesterday in the Times, the offices of the new company, which has just incorporated, will be in Minneapolis and the first annual meeting will be held there on May 2. The capitalization is $250,000 and work will be started at once on a big plant for briquetting the peat after it is dried by a part air part steam process, and the product will be put on the market to compete with coal, the fibrous portion being separated and baled for use in cities as stable litter, being both a disinfectant and an absorbent. The product will be ready for the market early next fall.

WHEN IS A REPUBLICAN?

Paul Pry, True to His Name, Would Like Some Information.

Interesting Gossip About the Complex Political Situation.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, April 5—The Republican State Central committee met Saturday principally for the purpose of struggling with the conundrum, "When is a Republican?" The subject is one on which recent events have thrown additional doubt. In an address delivered but a few weeks ago by a recognized national Republican leader, to-wit: Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, two parties were recognized as being represented in the national house of representatives—one composed of those members of congress who voted against the amendments to the rules submitted by Representative Norris; the other composed of Democrats and the so-called insurgents who voted with them in favor of the new rules. The first of these parties without doubt is in Mr. Cannon's opinion Republican. The other party, which he did not give a name, he evidently considered not to be worthy of recognition as Republican by the national leaders.

The Truly Loyal.

Evidently then, in Mr. Cannon's view, the real Republican party is composed only of those who believe in Cannon and in that policy which we recognize by the generic term of Cannonism. How far this definition is approved by the Republican State Central committee is not known. Whatever may have been the views of its members, however, it does not appear to have been willing to go on record as refusing to recognize the only true blue Republicanism, the brand that the majority of Republicans in congress stand for and represent. Possibly the fact that but a small majority of those who in Minnesota call themselves Republicans are willing to endorse the action of those who in congress, the speaker recognizes as Republicans, may have something to do with this.

Seeking a Test.

The endorsement of Cannon and Cannonism may therefore be consider-

MORE THAN HALF MILLION DOLLARS

$525000.00 on Deposit in the Local Banking Institutions.

A Remarkable Showing for City No Bigger Than Red Lake Falls.

The quarterly statements of the First State Bank and the Merchants State Bank, published in this issue of the Gazette, show that there is on deposit in those institutions more than a half million dollars, the actual amount being just a few hundred dollars less than $525,000.00.

That is a remarkable showing for banks in a city no larger than Red Lake Falls and indicates a gratifying condition of affairs in southern Red Lake county. Evidently the high cost of living hasn't taken all of the surplus cash. Every one in Red Lake Falls will feel justifiable pride in the showing that the banks, as indicators of local business conditions, have made.

Invests at Crookston.

J. E. Carpenter has just closed a deal by which he has sold to Jos. Laurent, a wealthy retired farmer from Terrebonne, the quarter of a block facing Elm street just back of the Allan McKinnon residence, and the two Oscar Halvorson lots just south of the C. F. Mix residence. On the latter site he will erect a $3000 residence and will make Crookston his future home. Mr. Laurent paid $2,900 for the real estate and it will all be improved in the near future. This is the class of new residents which any city is eager to acquire.—Crookston Times.

Prosperity or Poverty?

The fertility of the soil is the basis of all prosperity. The Almighty provided fertility of the soil for the reproduction of Plant Life but he did not provide a sufficient quantity to permit us to take away ten times as much as returned. A man that tills the soil year after year without putting back everything within his power is a robber of the soil! It is astounding but true, that most farmers are soil robbers. If we, as a nation, continue to farm and rob the soil for the next fifty years as we have in the past twenty-five, there will be a famine in America. Our children are bound to suffer if we continue our present tactics. Our forefathers gave up their lives to give us a free country. Now, are we going to give up this beautiful country and sacrifice the lives of our children? This is not a theory or flim-flam talk but an absolute fact, verified by the greatest living men of today. Germany produces 28 bushels of wheat and England 32 bushels per acre as compared with less than 14 bushels in the United States.

Buy a Great Western Manure Spreader and quit robbing the soil.

A HEROIC FATHER

BRAVERY COSTS HIS LIFE

Duluth.—Fred Anholm, the brave settler homesteading near Kalvida, who tried to rescue his three children from his burning home died of his burns. Of his happy family, only his wife and baby survive him. Two children were burned to death in the house and another, whom he carried out with its clothes on fire, died shortly afterwards on an improvised bed on the ground. Anholm was terribly burned and he suffered untold agony up to the end.

His home was a day's drive over rough roads to Moose Lake, the nearest railroad station. He was hurried to Duluth and to the hospital, but all that the sympathetic nurses could do was to alleviate his suffering.

The house took fire about 4:30 in the morning. Anholm and his wife with one baby and two men boarding with them reached the outside in safety. Failing to see his other three children, Anholm plunged into the flames in an attempt to reach them. He was gone so long that those waiting on the outside gave up hope of seeing him or the children again. In another minute he staggered through the door with one of the children. Both were human torches, and the efforts of those near were turned toward saving them. But they tried in vain, for the child did not live long and now the father is dead.

It is expected that a substantial subscription will be raised at Moose Lake and among Anholm's friends to aid the wife and baby. It is stated that they are absolutely destitute. The stricken mother reached St. Luke's hospital today. The hospital authorities are doing all in their power to help her, but she is without a cent and has no other place than the hospital to stop. Efforts will be made to interest Duluth people in her case.

It gives Mr. Harrison the right to go on to the farm and explore for iron for three years, and at the end of that time he must begin mining.

There has been a great deal of drilling going on in that locality for the past two years, and a great many options to purchase have been taken, but nothing has ever been given out as to what has been found. The filing of the contract would indicate the drills are finding iron.

Hettinger, N. D., March 31.—Louis B. Hanson, living five miles southwest was shot and instantly killed by his brother, Anton. The brothers came here three years ago from Ortonville, Minn. Anton had been released from the asylum for the insane at Rochester. He sold some property at Albert Lea for $1,500 and with the proceeds aided his brother Louis in getting a start. They had often quarreled as Anton wished some sort of settlement. This Louis refused. The brothers bought four quarts of whiskey and according to Anton's confession, drank about two quarts. On Sunday they continued the drinking and quarreled. At this point Anton says he cannot remember distinctly. He says he went into the house carrying some eggs he had gathered, when Louis came to him with a knife. Without hesitation he seized a rifle and shot. The first bullet struck Louis in the right cheek, coming out under the left eye, the second struck him in the mouth, coming out in the neck and severing a large artery. The prisoner has been turned over to the Perkins county officials as the murder was committed in South Dakota. The prisoner says he is guilty and ought to be hanged.

Nation-Wide Strike is Off But Men in the Two States Will Not Return to Work After April 1.

Lewis of miners declared today just before leaving the city for Indianapolis that "Pennsylvania and Illinois will be completely tide up." The miners in two districts number 190,000.

That means a fight in the two largest bituminous fields in the United States. Pennsylvania's annual production is 150,000,000 tons and Illinois is 50,000,000 tons. Ohio's production is 35,000,000 tons, giving employment to 60,000 miners. Under the plan adopted by the miners convention all the mines will be idle, as usual, on April 1st which is a holiday anniversary of the eight hour day. Then no miners are to return to work the next day unless ordered to do so by their district officials. These officials are not allowed to give that order unless all the mine owners in the district or sub-district have signed up a preliminary agreement adopted by the convention. Lewis said a strike in Canadian mines would be delayed even in the event of an immediate disagreement, because of the Canadian law, which requires the miners to give thirty days notice of an intention to strike.

JURIST STRICKEN

WAS VICTIM OF APOPLEXY

His Sudden Death Causes Profound Sorrow at Washington and Throughout the Country.—Many Cases Pending.

Washington, March 29.—The death of Justice David Josiah Brewer of the supreme court of the United States at his home in this city last night caused profound regret here and throughout the country. Many calls were made at the Brewer residence today by sympathizing friends of the family. In addition to messages of condolence arrived in great numbers.

Justice Brewer, dying of apoplexy, was found in a bath room of his house by Mrs. Brewer. She at once telephoned for Justice Gould of the supreme court of the district of Columbia who lives near at hand. Hurrying to the Brewer home Justice Gould with the assistance of two servants carried the body to a bedroom. Justice Brewer's pulse was still faintly beating.

David Josiah Brewer was born in Smyra, Asia Minor, June 20, 1837, the son of Rev. Josiah and Amelia Field Brewer. He was graduated from Yale university in 1856 and the Albany law school in 1858.

After his graduation from the Albany, N. Y., law school in 1858, following studying law in the office of his uncle, David Dudley Field, in New York, he entered the practice of law in Leavenworth, Kan. He was made United States commissioner of the circuit court in 1861, judge of the probate and criminal courts of Leavenworth county, 1863-64, and of the First district of Kansas, 1856-69; district attorney for Leavenworth county 1869-70 and judge of the supreme court of Kansas 1870-84.

He was appointed by President Arthur, judge of the United States circuit court for the Eighth circuit in 1884, and served five years and following this service, President Harrison appointed him associate justice of the supreme court.

BAD TANGLE RESULTS.

Many Cases of Great Importance are Before Supreme Court.

Washington, March 29.—The regiment of cases affecting the great corporations which are pending before the supreme court of the United States loomed up prominently today as a probable outcome of the death of Justice Brewer last night. These include the dissolution suits against the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey and the American Tobacco Co. and the corporation tax cases.

A decision of those cases by the seven justices on the bench now that Justice Brewer has passed away, and Justice Moody is incapacitated for service on account of rheumatism, is believed to depend almost entirely upon a unanimity of opinions on the questions. Some lawyers who have followed closely the decisions of the supreme court scout the idea that such unanimity exists and therefore, they are free in expressing the view that these cases will be set for reargument before the full court. It is probable that a vote already has been taken on all of these cases. If this be true and the court was equally devided or nearly so, it is believed that the court would hesitate to give to the country a decision which might have resulted differently if it had been decided by a full bench.

COAL STRIKE IMMINENT.

Conference Adjourns Without Reaching an Understanding.

Cincinnati, Ohio, March 29.—The declaration of an industrial war of great extent and severity seemed but a few hours away today when the delegates of 300,000 union miners of the United States met this afternoon to outline their course as the result of a Sine die adjournment without agreement of the joint conference of miners and operators of Ohio, Indiana and Western Pennsylvania.

Adjournment was taken following an all morning discussion and just after President T. L. Lewis of the United States Mine Workers of North America had declared: "When the miners go into this conflict it will be a fight to the finish, not to end until we are victors or this organization is completely routed. We will fight with every resource that human ingenuity can think of as our weapon."

St. Louis, March 29.—All Illinois coal mines will shut down Thursday night according to Alfred J. Moorshead, president of the Illinois Coal operators association, who said today that the mines will be closed for an indefinite period. SYNOPSIS.

Baraka, a Tartar girl, became enamored of a golden bearded stranger who was [illegible] studying [illegible] in the [illegible] of her home in central Asia, and [illegible] to him the location of a mine of rubies [illegible] that the stranger would [illegible] for her disclosure. [illegible] Lady Maud arrived in Bayreuth.

"On account of her temper, I suppose," answered the good lady absently, for she was looking up and down the columns in search of something she had already seen. "Here it is," she said. "It is under the shipping news. 'Cape Finisterre. Passed at 1 p.m., going south, steam yacht Erinna, with owner and party on board. All well.' My dear child, it is quite plain that if this is Mons. Logotheti's yacht, he is going to Gibraltar."

"I don't know anything about geography," Margaret said, and her wrath, which had been smouldering sullenly, began to glow again.

"Margaret," said Mrs. Rushmore, "[illegible]! You were very [illegible]."

The prima donna did not hear the [illegible] of mild reproof that [illegible]. She knew well enough [illegible] Gibraltar was, and that Logo[illegible] going all the way round to the Mediterranean on his yacht with [illegible] for company, and that the [illegible] one. After what Lady Maud had said there was not [illegible] her mind as to his [illegible] could be no one but [illegible]. He had been told that he [illegible] at Bayreuth, and he [illegible] the sunset of his [illegible] life in his own way. That [illegible]. If he received the telegram that had just been sent to him, [illegible] at Gibraltar, should [illegible] there, and as for answering it [illegible] Margaret left Bayreuth, she [illegible] to make such a thing impossible by going away the next morning, or that very night.

Her angry reflections and Mrs. Rushmore's lecture on the importance of geography in education were interrupted by the direct entrance of Mr. Van Torp, who was announced and [illegible] to the door by Justine in a [illegible] French manner. On the threshold, however, he stood still and asked if he might come in, being pressed to do so he yielded, advanced, and sat down between the two ladies.

"Mr. Van Torp," said Mrs. Rushmore, "I insist upon knowing what has become of Countess Leven."

"I don't know, Mrs. Rushmore," answered the millionaire, slowly rubbing his hands. "I haven't spoken to her since I brought her from the station. I dare say she's all right. She's probably gone to take a walk. She often [illegible] in the country, I know—her father's [illegible]. I hope you'll pay a visit some day. Why, yes, Lady Maud sometimes goes off alone and walks miles and miles."

"There, Margaret," said Mrs. Rushmore triumphantly, "what did I tell you? Mr. Van Torp says the countess often walks for miles and miles."

"Why, certainly," said Mr. Van Torp, "though I'm bound to say she's just as fond of horseback. Her friends generally call her Lady Maud, Mrs. Rushmore. Perhaps you won't mind my telling you, as she prefers it [illegible] herself. You see, I've had the pleasure of knowing her several years, so I dare say you'll forgive me for mentioning it."

"I think it is quite kind of you, on the contrary," answered Mrs. Rushmore. "Margaret, why did you never tell me that? Had you any reason for not telling me?"

"I don't think I noticed what you called her," Margaret answered patiently.

"Because if you had any reason," said Mrs. Rushmore, following her own thoughts, "I insist upon knowing what it was."

"Well, now, I'll tell you," rejoined Mr. Van Torp, to save Margaret the trouble of answering the futile little speech, "her husband didn't treat her very well. There's not a purer woman in the six continents, Mrs. Rushmore, but he tried to divorce her, because he'd lost his money, if he ever had any, and she had none, and he wanted to marry an heiress. However, they automobiled him, or something, in St. Petersburg last June."

"Auto—what did you say?" inquired Mrs. Rushmore.

"Killed by an automobile," explained Mr. Van Torp gravely. "But now I come to think, it wasn't that. He got blown up by a bomb meant for a better man. It was quite instantaneous, I recollect. His head disappeared suddenly, and the greater part of him was scattered around, but they found his pocket-book with his cards and things, so they knew who it was. It was driven through somebody else's hat on the other side of the street, wasn't it, Miss Donne? Things must have been quite lively just then, where it happened. I supposed you knew."

Mrs. Rushmore explained that she had never heard any details.

"Besides," said Mr. Van Torp, in answer, though not quite relevantly, "everybody always calls her 'Lady Maud' instead of 'Countess Leven,' which she has on her cards."

"She would naturally use the higher title," observed Mrs. Rushmore reverently.

"Well, now, about that," objected Mr. Van Torp. "I'm bound to say I think the daughter of an English earl as good as a Russian count, anywhere west of Siberia. I don't know how they figure those things out at courts when they have to balance 'em up for seats at a dinner party, of course. It's just my impression, that's all, as a business man. He's dead, anyway, and one needn't make personal remarks about dead men. All the same, it was a happy release for Lady Maud, and I doubt if she sits up all night mourning for him. Have you been out this afternoon, Miss Donne?"

He changed the subject with extreme directness, and Mrs. Rushmore, who was used to the dictatorial ways of lions, took the hint submissively enough, though she would have been glad to discuss the relative and intrinsic values of the designations "Lady Maud" and "Countess Leven." But it was much more important that the lion should be left alone with Margaret as much as possible, and the excellent lady therefore remembered that she had something to do and left them.

"I had a little talk with Kralinsky before he left," said Van Torp, when she was gone. "He says he'll meet us in Venice any time in the next few days. He's just going to run over to Vienna in his sudden-death-cart for 24 hours; then he'll go south, he says. He ran me up to the hotel and dropped me. I dare say you heard the toots. I thought I saw Lady Maud looking out of the window of your room as I got out."

"Yes," Margaret said. "But how do you know that is my window?"

"In the first place, I've counted the windows. I felt a sort of interest in knowing which was yours. And then, I often see your maid opening the shutters in the morning."

"Oh!" Margaret smiled. "Did you notice anything unusual about Lady Maud when you saw her?" she asked, for she knew that he had good eyes.

"Since you mention it, I thought she looked as if she didn't feel quite up to the mark—pale, I thought she was."

"Yes," Margaret said. "She felt ill for a moment, and I thought she was going to faint. But it passed almost directly, and she insisted on going for a walk."

"Oh," mused Mr. Van Torp, "is that so? Well, I dare say it was the best thing she could do. I was telling you about Kralinsky. He's not Levi Longlegs after all, and I'm not sure he was ever in the west."

"I thought it sounded unlikely," Margaret said.

"I asked him, just like that, in a friendly way, and he thought a moment and made an effort to recollect, and then he seemed quite pleased to remember that I'd been 'Fanny' and he'd been 'Levi Longlegs,' and that he used to whistle things out of 'Parsifal' by the fire of an evening."

"Well—but in that case—" Margaret stopped with an inquiring look.

"Just so," continued Van Torp, nodding. "Did you ever attend a trial and hear a witness being cross-examined by a lawyer who wants him to remember something, and he wants to remember it himself, but can't because he never heard of it before in his life? It's quite funny. The lawyer makes steps for him and puts his feet into them so that he gets along nicely, unless the judge happens to wake up and kick, and then the little game stops right there, and somebody laughs. Well, my talk with Kralinsky was like that, only there was no judge, so he went away happy; and we're old friends now, and punched cows on the same ranch, and he's coming on my yacht. I only wonder why he was so anxious to remember all that, and why he thought it would be kind of friendly if I called him Levi Longlegs again, and he called me Fanny Cook. I wonder! He says he's still very fond of 'Parsifal,' and came on purpose to hear it, but that he's completely forgotten how to whistle. That's funny, too. I just thought I'd tell you, because if you come on my yacht and he comes, too, you're liable to see quite a good deal of one another."

"I'm Not Sure He Was Ever in the West."

"Did you tell him that Mrs. Rushmore and I would come?" Margaret asked. "And Lady Maud?"

"Why, no. You've not promised yet, any more than you did last night when we talked about it, so how could I? I forgot to mention Lady Maud to him, or else I thought I wouldn't—I forget which. It doesn't matter."

"No," Margaret smiled. "Not a little bit!"

"You seem amused," observed Mr. Van Torp.

"By your way of putting it and your pretending to forget such a thing."

"It wasn't quite true that I forgot, but I wanted to, so I didn't say anything about her. That's why I put it in that way. I don't choose to leave you any doubt about what I say, or mean, even in the smallest things. The moment you feel the least doubt about the perfect accuracy of anything I tell you, even if it's not at all a downright lie or anything resembling one, you won't trust me at all, in anything. Because, if you trust me, you'll end by liking me, and if you don't trust me you'll go back to thinking that I'm the Beast out of Revelation, or something, as you used to."

"I've forgotten all about the Beast," Margaret said.

"Thank you," answered Mr. Van Torp. "To change the subject—I've got a little scheme to propose. Maybe you'll think well of it. Anyhow, as it's a mere matter of business connected with your career, you won't mind my explaining it to you, will you?"

"No, indeed!" Margaret was interested at once. "Do tell me!" she said, leaning forward a little.

"Well," he began, "I've looked around this place a good deal since I've been here, and I've come to the conclusion that it's not very well done, anyhow, except 'Parsifal.' That's what people really come for. I'm informed that they give all the other operas better in Munich, with the advantage of being in what you might call a Christian town, compared with this. Is that correct, do you think?"

"Yes, I believe so."

"It is, you can depend upon it. Now, what I want to know is, why you and I shouldn't go into a little business partnership, and do this kind of thing ourselves, as it ought to be done." Margaret opened her handsome eyes wide.

"Because," continued Mr. Van Torp, as coolly as if he were explaining a new plan to a board of directors, "we've got the capital and the ability between us, and there's a demand in New York for what I propose to do. It'll fill a want, I know, and that means success and money. Why don't we build a theater together? When I say a theater, I mean a first-class opera house and not a barn. We'll employ the best architects to build it, and, of course, I'd leave everything about it to you. I've got a block in New York just about in the right place, and it won't take long to build. I'll give the land and put up the money for the building, if you'll undertake the management. You'll put in any money you like, of course, and we'll share the profits. Maybe they'll be quite handsome, for we'll lease the theater to other people outside of the season. We'll have the best talent in Europe, and pay for it, and the public will pay us back. We'll call it the Cordova Opera, if you like, and you'll run it according to your own ideas, and sing or not, whenever you please."

"The Company, Which Is You and I, Will Probably Rule—"

"Are you in earnest?"

Margaret had some difficulty in pronouncing the words clearly. Was there ever a great soprano who did not dream of having the most perfect theater of her very own, and who could receive unmoved the offer to build one from a man who could build 20 if he chose? Very rarely in her life had she been aware of her bodily heart, but she could feel it now, beating like a hammer on the anvil.

"I'm in earnest," Van Torp answered with perfect calm. "I've thought the whole thing over in all its aspects, just as I would a railroad, or a canal, or a mine, and I'm convinced to try it, if you'll help me, because it's going to be a safe investment. You see, Miss Donne," he went on slowly, "there's no artist on the grand opera stage now who's so well equipped for the business as you are. I'm not flattering you, either. In your own kind of parts you've simply got no rival. Everybody says so, and I suppose you don't play kitty and deny it. Let's start fair, now."

"It would be silly to deny that I'm one of the first," Margaret admitted.

"That'll do, thank you. One of the first, and the first is one of them, and you're it. Besides, you've got before you what's behind most of them. You're young. I'm not talking about your personal appearance, but that's just one more item in the assets. Another big one is that you're a first-class musician, whereas half these singers can only hang the box like great, thundering overgrown schoolgirls. Allow that?"

"I suppose I must 'allow' anything," laughed the prima donna.

"Well, now, I've told you. You've got the name I need, and you've got the voice, and the talent, and you've got the science and culture. I suppose you'll let me say that I've got the business ability, won't you?"

The iron mouth smiled a little grimly.

"Rather! I fancy some people have wished you had less!"

"And the money's here, for I always have a blank cheque in my pocket. If you like, I'll fill it in, and we'll deposit it wherever you say, in the name of the 'Cordova Opera Company,' or 'Mme. da Cordova, Rufus Van Torp & Co.' We can make out our little agreement in duplicate right here, on the corner of the table, and sign it; and before we leave here you might go around and speak to the best singers about an engagement in New York for a Wagner festival, a year from next Christmas. That's business, and this is a purely business proposition. If you'd like to think it over, I'll go and take a little walk before dinner."

"Money's an awful reality," Van Torp remarked. "I'm talking business, and as I'm the one who's going to put up most of the capital, you'll do me the credit to believe that I'm quite wide awake."

It was not the first time in his life that the financier had seen the stunning effect of a big sum, projected with precision, like a shell, at exactly the right moment. He was playing the great game again, but for a prize he thought worth more than any he had yet won, and the very magnitude of the risk steadied his naturally steady brain.

"Yes," he said quietly, "I do. Perhaps I've startled you a little, and I shouldn't like you to make a decision till you feel quite ready to. I'll just say again that I've thought the whole thing out as a genuine venture, and that I believe in it, or I wouldn't propose it. Maybe you've got some sensible lawyer you have confidence in, and would like to consult him first. If you feel that way, I'd rather you should. A business partnership's not a thing to go into with your eyes shut, and if we had any reason for distrusting one another, it would be better to make inquiries. But so far as that goes, it appears to me that we've got the facts to go on, which would make any partnership succeed. You've certainly got the musical brains, besides a little money of your own, and I've certainly got the rest of the funds. I'd like you to put some money in it, though, if you can spare it, because that's a guarantee that you're going to be in earnest, too, and do your share in the musical side. You see I'm talking to you just as I would to a man in the same position. Not because I doubt that if you put your name to a piece of paper you really will do your share as a partner, but because I'm used to working in that sort of way in business. How does that strike you? I hope you're not offended?"

"Offended!"

There was no mistaking the suppressed excitement and delight in her voice. If he had possessed the intelligence of Mephistopheles and the charm of Faust he could not have said anything more subtly pleasing to her dignity and her vanity.

"Of course," he said, "it needn't be a very large sum. Still it ought to be something that would make a difference to you."

She hesitated a moment, and then spoke rather timidly.

"I think perhaps—if we did it—I could manage a hundred thousand pounds," she said. "Would that be too little, do you think?"

The large mouth twitched and then smiled pleasantly.

"That's too much," he said, shaking his head. "You mustn't put all your money in one basket. A hundred thousand dollars would be quite enough as your share of the capital, with option to buy stock of me at par, up to a million, or so, if it's a success."

"Really? Would that be enough? And, please, what is 'stock' in such a case?"

"Stock," said the financier, "is a little plant which, when well watered, will grow like the mustard seed, till all the birds of Wall street make their nests in its branches. And if you don't water it too much, it'll be all right. In our case, the stock is going to be that share of the business which most people sell to raise money, and which we mean to keep for ourselves. I always do it that way, when circumstances allow. I once bought all the stock of a railroad for nothing, for instance, and sold all the bonds, and let it go bankrupt. Then I bought the road one day, and found all the stock was in my own pocket. That's only a little illustration. But I guess you can leave the financial side in my hands. You won't lose by it, I'm pretty sure."

"I fancy not!" Margaret's eyes were wide open, her hands were clasped tightly on her knee, and she was leaning forward a little. "Besides," she went on, "it would not be the money that I should care about! I can earn more money than I want, and I have a little fortune of my own—the hundred thousand I offered you. Oh, no! It would be the splendid power to have the most beautiful music in the world given as it could be given nowhere else! The joy of singing myself—the parts I can sing—in the most perfect surroundings! An orchestra picked from the whole world of orchestras, the greatest living leaders, the most faultless chorus! And the scenery, and the costumes—everything as everything could be, if it were really, really the best that can be had! Do you believe it is possible to have all that?"

"Oh, yes, and with your name to it, too. We'll have everything on earth that money can buy to make a perfect opera, and I'll guarantee it'll pay after the first two seasons. That is, if you'll work at it as hard as I will. But you've got to work, Miss Donne, you've got to work, or it's no use thinking of it. That's my opinion."

"I'll work like a Trojan!" cried Margaret enthusiastically.

She had enough experience in herself, and enough knowledge of the conditions to believe that her own hard work, combined with Van Torp's unlimited capital, could and certainly would produce such an opera house, and bring to it such artists as had never been seen and heard, except perhaps in Bayreuth, during its first great days, now long past.

Then, too, he had put the matter before her so skillfully that she could look upon it honestly as a business partnership, in which her voice, her judgment, and her experience would bear no contemptible proportion to his money, and in which she herself was to invest money of her own, thereby sharing the risk according to her fortune as well as giving the greater part of the labor. She felt for some weak place in the scheme, groping as if she were dazzled, but she could find none.

"I don't think I shall need time to think this over," she said, controlling her voice better, now that she had made up her mind. "As I understand it, I am to put in what I can in the way of ready money, and I am to give my time in all ways, as you need it, and my voice, when it is wanted. Is that it?"

"Except that, when you choose to sing, the company will allow you your usual price for each appearance," answered Van Torp in a business-like manner. "You will pay yourself, or we both shall pay you, just as much as we would pay any other first-class soprano, or as much more as you would get in London or New York if you signed an engagement."

"Is that fair?" Margaret asked.

"Why, certainly. But the company, which is you and I, will probably rule that you mustn't sing in grand opera anywhere in the states east of the rockies. They've got to come to New York to hear you. Naturally, you'll be free to do anything you like in Europe outside of our season, when you can spare the time."

"Of course."

"Well, now, I suppose we might as well note that down right away, as a preliminary agreement. What do you say?"

"I say that I simply cannot refuse such an offer!" Margaret answered.

"Your consent is all that's necessary," he said, in a matter-of-fact tone.

He produced from an inner pocket a folded sheet of foolscap, which he spread on the corner of the table beside him. He took out a fountain pen and began to write quickly. The terms and forms were as familiar to him as the alphabet and he lost no time; besides, as he had told the prima donna, he had thought out the whole matter beforehand.

"What if Mrs. Rushmore comes in just as we are signing it?" asked Margaret.

"We'll tell her, and ask her to witness our signatures," replied Van Torp without looking up. "I judge Mrs. Rushmore to have quite a knowledge of business."

"You seem able to write and talk at the same time," Margaret said, smiling.

"Business talk, yes." The pen ran on swiftly. "There. That's about all, I should say. Do you think you can read my writing? I don't suppose you've ever seen it."

"Tea with Children."

"Tea," says the London Chronicle, "in the garden is one of the best-established of our mid-Victorian institutions. Mr. E. V. Lucas—who is a connoisseur of the caddy—recalls in his essay, 'The Divine Leaf,' a story of the late Arthur Cecil, who once encountered the following inscription in a garden at Kew: 'Tea, plain, 6d.; tea, with shrimps, 9d.; tea, with children, 1s.'"

TURN PEARY DOWN

House Committee Refuses to Honor Pole Discoverer.

Representative Macon Openly Hints He Has Doubts Whether Naval Officer Found "Top of the World."

Washington.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook no doubt has gotten much solace out of the fact that the subcommittee of the house naval committee has refused to bestow a reward upon Commander Robert E. Peary.

The house committee wants proof. Peary has refused to submit it for the reason that it would interfere with his lectures and magazine articles. Evidently Peary thinks more of the money he can make by writing and lecturing than he does of a reward bestowed by congress, so there the matter rests. Representative Macon of Arkansas was the chief objector to conferring congressional honor upon Peary until the commander produces the proof of his claim that he found the north pole.

"I confess that I am exceedingly skeptical about Mr. Peary's ever having discovered the pole," declared Mr. Macon before the committee, "and I am going to protest against any honor being conferred upon him by congress until he has established beyond a reasonable doubt that he did discover it, and it must be established in the open and not in the dark." He expressed himself as being "indignant at the thought of being called upon as a representative of the American people to confer a high honor upon any one of its citizens in the dark." All legislation by congress, he said, ought to be open and above board.

Mr. Macon said he wanted to direct attention to one "discrepancy" in Mr. Peary's story. This was the speed which the explorer declared he made from the time Capt. Bartlett left him until he reached the pole. Mr. Peary said that for five days he made 26.4 miles per day; but, Mr. Macon said, this appeared very singular in view of the fact that the Peary party had made but 9.06 miles per day up to the time Bartlett left.

Diagram of Peary's Route.

"The astonishing part of Mr. Peary's statement," said Mr. Macon, "is the number of miles he traveled every day after Bartlett left him and when no white men was with him as witnesses, his only companion being his negro valet and four Eskimos. His greatest marches, singularly, were all north of the Bartlett camp. From that time forward, going to the pole and returning to Cape Columbia, he claims to have made an average of 26.4 miles per day until he reached the pole, 44 miles per day on his way back from the pole to Bartlett's camp and 28.6 miles per day from Bartlett's camp to Cape Columbia.

Mr. Macon declared that Mr. Peary's own statements showed that he equaled this speed but twice during the entire journey to the pole. The first day he started from land he made 26 miles in 14 hours of forced march, "which Mr. Peary has told us was about the limit of human endurance."

Mr. Macon quoted Lieut. Shackleton, Gen. Greely and others to show that "ten or twelve miles per day, or slightly more, perhaps, is considered the limit of human endurance, travelling over polar seas."

The only member of the committee who did not vote to defer action on the bill was Representative Englebright of California, who said he was convinced that Mr. Peary had discovered the pole and that the committee had sufficient proofs before it.

Representative Bates of Pennsylvania, however, considered a supporter of Peary, offered the resolution, which was adopted, declaring that the committee must have further proof before proceeding.

The boy over in the corner shot up like a bolt.

"Y-y-yes, sir," faltered the scholar.

"And what," pursued the examiner, "do we do with the bones?"

"P-please, sir," responded the nervous one, with chattering teeth, "we l-leave 'em on the s-s-sides of our plates."

The Judge and the Doctor

Man of Medicine, After Jurist's Explanation, Concluded to Let His Grievance Pass.

The physician was a witness in a damage case, and his answers to questions had been marked by more length than lucidity. The lawyer who was examining him several times cautioned him to confine his replies to subjects involved in the questions, but this warning had little effect. Finally the judge lost patience and told him to make an effort to shorten his answers and to quit talking when he got through.

This had some effect temporarily, but a few minutes later the physician began a long and rambling answer which had only a vague and remote bearing upon what had been asked him.

"Look here," said the now irate judge, "you are wasting the time of the court, the attorneys, the witnesses and everybody else here, and delaying the trial of the case. Now, if you don't confine yourself to plain answers hereafter I shall send you to jail for contempt of court!"

That had its effect, and the testimony of the witness was concluded in a reasonable time after that.

The next day the judge and the physician met upon the street. They are acquaintances, and stopped and shook hands.

"Say, Judge," inquired the doctor, "would it be contempt of court, now that you are no longer on the bench, to say that you acted like a damned fool at the trial yesterday, and would you send me to jail?"

"Oh, no," replied his honor, easily. "I'd go to jail; you'd go to the hospital."

The physician didn't say what he had intended to say.

Wood Chopping as a Sport.

In Tasmania is to be found a national pastime that is special and particular to that state alone—the sport of wood chopping. At Hobart and Launceston they have their turf meetings, their cricket, football, golf, cycling, and so forth, but to a wood-chopping contest people will flock from far and near—men, women and children—and watch the axmen hewing away at huge blocks of timber as if life and reputation depended upon the issue. Thud, thud, thud go the axes, and the splinters fly in all directions, the judges calmly sitting near taking note of the strokes, the spectators cheering the competitors from time to time as frantically as if they were race horses. To be a wood-chopping champion means something to a man in Tasmania.

Inconsiderate.

"That conductor isn't very considerate of people's feelings." "No, he'd tell a man with a wooden leg to 'step lively.'"

The Republican state convention has been called to meet at St. Paul June 23. There will be 1075 delegates. It may be said with all seriousness that the campaign is on.

Hon. Thomas Wilson, once chief justice of the supreme court, congressman and Democratic candidate for governor in 1890, died at his home in St. Paul Sunday. Judge Wilson was full of years and honors, and was counted one of the most learned and upright men in the state. For the past eighteen years he has been general counsel for the Omaha railway.

At the present moment, John Lind of Minneapolis is the most likely candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor. A message brought by F. B. Lynch corroborates the story. This is the way the Democratic leaders look at the situation. They say the reports from the country indicate that Lind is the choice. It appears to be the logical nomination, observes the Minneapolis Tribune.

If the New York Democrats should get behind Gaynor they might find a kindly response from Minnesota Democrats, says the Hallock Enterprise. At the time of the Johnson candidacy for the presidency, the New York city Democrats were kindly disposed to Johnson, and had it been necessary, or had it been important in bringing about Johnson's nomination, Johnson would have had the New York vote.

The conservation and boost idea seems to have developed into an epidemic for the newspapers of the country are being flooded with circulars of every description requesting "boosts" for this and that project. While the country press is often ridiculed as a vehicle for dissemination of news, says the Detroit Record, yet it is an undisputed fact that when matters of importance are to be brought to the peoples' attention, the rural press is called upon to exercise its functions and generally in this pleasing manner: "If you see fit to mention this as a news item it will be appreciated and please send marked copy to the following address." These requests are a great assistance at the end of the week when the salary checks are signed!

Miss Mary Garden, at a tea in Philadelphia, praised the skill of the modern corset maker. "It is really wonderful," said Miss Garden, "what this artist can do. I have seen fat old women, who from certain aspects, looked like supple girls. It reminds me of an answer I heard in Sunday school when I was a little child. 'What is it,' our superintendent asked, 'that binds up together and makes us better than we are by nature?' 'Our corsets, sir,' piped a wise little girl of eight."

The Albert Lea Standard pays this deserved tribute to one of the big men of Minnesota: "Frederick B. Lynch, national Democratic committeeman, big-brained, big-hearted and patriotic citizen, says, 'I don't make a business of politics. What little I dabble in it is just for the fun of the thing.' And, better yet, it may well be added, he creates a lot of keen fun for the rest of us. Both politics and the cause of good government would be on a more unselfish and higher plane if more men of the stamp of Mr. Lynch would devote their efforts and means to their promotion as he has manfully done."

The humble hen holds no inconspicuous place as a contributer to the wealth of the country. Missouri is one of the states that keeps official track of the hen, and the labor bureau of the commonwealth has just made a report on the subject. It appears from the records that in 1908 the value of the eggs laid by Missouri hens and sold elsewhere was $22,027,628. The value of poultry shipped out of the state for the same period was $22,095,658, and the value of feathers sold for the same time was $837,687. Here is a grand total of $54,960,673 from surplus poultry and poultry products alone. The showing takes no account of the quantity and value of eggs and poultry consumed at home or of the value of the feathered stock still on hand. Missouri is but one state. The aggregate for the United States must make a big array in favor of the hen.

A LITTLE STRANGE.

It seems a little strange, to say the least, that in their dealings with the corporations, representatives of the administration at Washington do not find more frequent opportunity to construe the law in favor of the people, to resolve the doubt against the trusts instead of in their faver, says the Winona Independent.

Another instance occurs. The government's purchase of 40,000 acres from the Friars was made on the ground that large holdings by religious bodies were prejudicial to the best interests of the islands. The organic act passed by congress in July 1902, forbade the sale of more than forty acres of Phillipine land to any individual and of more than 2,500 to any corporation. But Attorney General Wickersham has just approved of the sale of 55,000 acres of this land to representatives of the sugar trust. His position is that the Friar estates do not come under the act of 1902.

The sugar trust being powerful, resourceful, industrious, gets its case plausibly briefed up and presented to the attorney general, an agreeable fellow, and flattered by his own greatness, subscribes his O. K. If the attorney general were entirely frank, perhaps he would reply to the critics that if the people had a showing in opposition it isn't his fault that they didn't make it, all oblivious to the little circumstance that when the people made him they thought they were making a showing to meet all such cases.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Red Wing Free Press: By way of intimidation the Republican congressional committee has caused to be trumpeted throughout the country that it will lend no support whatsoever to any insurgent congressman seeking re-election. So far as Minnesota and other Northwestern states are concerned, this will be the very best recommendation such candidates can secure.

Long Prairie Argus: It sounds something like a farce to hear politicians advocating county option with a breath that smells like a beer keg.

Princetown Union: Republican state committee meets at the Merchant's hotel, St. Paul, next Saturday to issue the call for the Republican state convention, which it is thought will be held about the middle of June. The latter part of August would be early enough. Why not ratify the "slate" that has already been prepared by Ed and Dar, and dispense with the holding of a convention?

Sauk Rapids Sentinel-Free Press: Politics, like war, may be hell, but a little hell now and then is relished by the best of men.

Red Wing Republican (Rep.): Every insurgent is a marked man for the next election, so far as patronage and party leaders are concerned. Now the temper of the country is just as perfectly ascertained. It will not stand for corporate control. It will elect anybody: Republican or Democrat, who stands for the people as against the trusts. It prefers the Republican, but if it takes its orders from Wall street, it will choose the Democrat instead. The insurgent is the only man who stands between the Republican party and destruction today. Help to hold up his hands.

St. Cloud Journal Press: It seems to us, and we say it in sorrow and not in anger, as though the Republican leaders were working to throw the next house into the control of the Democrats. Congressman Lindbergh will be returned to congress by the largest majority ever given a candidate in this district, not because of any great personal popularity, but because he has had the courage to vote as he believed his constituents wanted him to vote. He has not been successful in appointing postmasters, but he has won the confidence of the people.

WHEN IS A REPUBLICAN?

ed to be officially declared to be no true test of Republicanism in Minnesota. Nor is it quite clear who is to define Republicanism or by what it is to be measured. If the Republican party in Minnesota is not willing to stand for Cannon it is equally apparent, from the course pursued by its representatives in the senate, that it is also unwilling to recognize Aldrich as the leader of the Republican sentiment in that body. Nor can even support or non-support of the measures prepared by members of the cabinet under the personal supervision of the president himself be regarded an infallible test. Senator Clapp was very out-spoken recently in that regard. Speaking recently against a measure bearing the president's o. k., "I am glad," he said, "that there is no law, expressed or implied, binding upon me as a member of the senate to vote for a bill because of its origin," which means, if it means anything, that Senator Clapp does not recognize even in the president the head of the party to which he belongs and one whose wishes should be his law unto those who call themselves Republicans.

Support of the Tariff no Test.

Since William Howard Taft was elected to the high office of president of this republic now nearly two years ago, but a single measure of national importance has been passed by the congress in which the party to which he owes his election is in a majority in both branches. To the passage of that law the Republican party was pledged. The president has on more than one occasion embraced the opportunity to declare the Payne-Aldrich tariff law the most flawless flower of Republican effort—its fullest and most perfect fruitage. Still we find the Minnesota State Central Committee willing to make the approval of this tariff the test of Republicans in Minnesota. Its failure to do this indicates how hard it is to please.

Is This a Repuclican Program?

Something more might be said of what, from the national point of view, Republicanism stands for. It stands, regarding the president as its mouthpiece, for a postal savings banks system in which the savings of the people of this broad land shall be invested in United States Bonds, and thus withdrawn from local circulation to find their way ultimately to the great financial centers in which these bonds are negotiated. It stands on the same authority for subsidies to be paid to the shipping trust. It stands through recognized Republican leaders, for a great central bank to which all other banks should be subsidiary and auxiliary. Still upon more of these great national policies was the official organization of the Republican party in Minnesota willing to stand or fall. I did not make the endorsement of any or all of them the test by which a voter's Republicanism should be measured when he undertook to take part in electing delegates to the Republican convention soon to be held. Clearly in the view of the Republican state central committee to make the approval of the national policy of the Republican party or the policy outlined by the leaders of the parties from the president down would be unsafe and might possibly result in party disintegration.

Still Another Test Rejected.

There is another view—the view that membership in the Republican party depends on loyalty to its loyal leaders. Thus it may be assumed that if a Republican supports his party nominee at home he may be allowed considerable latitude with regard to national issues on which opinion differs widely and which are in any way in some measures sectional in their character. This evidently was the view of the Republican state central committee, when it declined to make standpatism or insurgency a test of party loyalty and when it did not exact from Republican voters before they took part in Republican primaries, an expression of approval either of the acts of national leaders from president down or endorsement of national policies.

The Vote for Governor.

Clearly then, the only other test of Republicanism in this state can be the loyalty of the rank and file to local Republican leaders. Two years ago or somewhat less, the Republican party put in nomination for governor of the state a gentleman who more than anyone else stood for and represented everything worth while in Republican achievement so far as the state is concerned in the last quarter of a century. Clearly from every logical point of view such a leader was entitled to his party's endorsement at the polls. Every man who voted for him had a right to claim that he was a loyal Republican. But what of those who voted against him? Can they also claim the right to take part in the counsels of their party as loyal Republicans? If not "When is a Republican?" What is the test? How are we to know?

Only a Makeshift.

Although the Republican state central committee was selected by the candidate to whom I have referred, even it did not care to go on record as defining a Republican as a man who voted for Mr. Jacobson and rejecting others as mere pretenders, although there would have been some logic in this. If Mr Jacobson had been elected support of him would undoubtedly have been the test. He didn't get enough votes, however, and to base representation on the vote for him—unquestionably the best measures of Republicanism a state vote offered—would not give some districts of the state the representation in the state convention which, from motives of policy, it was thought desirable they should have. Seeing this, the Republican state central committee appears to have thrown up the sponge. For we cannot assume that the state central committee seriously proposes to measure a man's Republicanism by whether he voted for Julius Schmahl for secretary of state or Judge Mills for member of the railroad and warehouse commission.

The Problem Unsolved.

The fact is, it is difficult to see how the congress it is proposed to ask to convene here in midsummer can lay claim to be regarded as a representative Republican convention. Doubtless it will be composed of gentlemen who, for the most part, at some time or other, have voted for Republican candidates. The delegates to it will be elected, where the form of holding a caucus is observed, by those who may even now call themselves Republicans. But, after all, if the leaders in congress have read a majority of those whose actions Minnesota voters approve out of the Republican party, can they claim to be in it? Is a claim to Republicanism well founded by a man who disapproves of the legislation enacted by that party and of that which its leaders have prepared and urged congress to enact? Is a man a true blue Republican who has no confidence in the leaders of his party and does not hesitate openly to disapprove their action? All of which only harks back to the origin of the conundrum: "When is a Republican?"

Chapter 22 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota, 1905, entitled "Forestry and fire wardens," Requires the Forestry Commissioner to prepare an abstract of the penal laws relating to forest and prairie fires and he may require any county board to cause at least three weeks published notice thereof to be given. The following is accordingly hereby published:

STATE OF MINNESOTA
Office of Forestry Commission.
St. Paul March 15, 1910.

The law of Minnesota for preventing and suppressing forest and prairie fires, as amended by Chapter 182, Laws of 1909, makes town supervisors, town clerks, village presidents and mayors of cities fire wardens, and requires them to take precautions against, report them promptly and prosecute offenders.

THE LAW FORBIDS:

Setting fire and not extinguishing it before it endangers the property of another:

Throwing or dropping burning substance into combustible material without extinguishing same;

Starting camp fire without clearing ground within a radius of ten feet.

Setting fire to brush or slashings in clearing land before piling same;

Setting fire to brush or slashings or other combustible material in a dry season, or allowing fire to be burning or smouldering in such season.

Those who cut timber or wood to sell must pile the slashings and burn the same as soon as practicable, and when it can be done without danger, and before the first of May.

Rangers may be appointed in a dry and dangerous season.

Railroad companies must keep their right of ways clear of combustible material, extinguish fires that occur near their lines of road, also patrol their roads in dangerous weather. The master mechanic and locomotive engineer, as well as the company, are responsible for the efficiency of spark arresters.

The minimum penalty for violation of any of the provisions of this law is $50; the maximum penalty, $100 or three months imprisonment in jail.

C. C. ANDREWS,
Forestry Commissioner.

S.S.S. CURES OLD BLOOD TROUBLES

Contagious Blood Poison is at the bottom of a great many old blood troubles. The disease may have been contracted years ago and some treatment used that removed the outward symptoms and shut the virus up in the system to slumber in the blood, but it only awaited a favorable opportunity to break out in some form again.

Certain forms of catarrhal troubles, especially where the bones are affected, scrofulous affections, non-healing sores, ulcerated membranes, etc., are due to this specific poison. Perhaps many who are afflicted in this way are ignorant of the fact that the seeds of this mighty poison are still hidden in the blood. Like the deadly serpent, which is dangerous as long as the faintest spark of life is left to enable it to sink its poisonous fangs, this powerful disease will corrupt and defile while the least particle of its insidious virus remains in the blood.

The best time to get rid of Contagious Blood Poison is when the disease is first contracted, and before its virus so penetrates the blood as to cause ulcerated mouth and throat, copper-colored spots, falling hair, etc. Then of course the victim is caused much humiliation and suffering; but even after the poison has become established in the system it can be removed and a cure effected if the blood be thoroughly purified with S.S.S.

A PERFECT CURE.

Some eight years ago I was inoculated with poison by a nurse who infected my babe with blood taint. I was covered with sores and ulcers from head to foot. No language can express my feelings of woe during those long years. I was advised by friends who had seen wonderful cures made by it, to try S.S.S. We got some and I improved from the start, and a complete and perfect cure was the result. S.S.S. is the only blood remedy which reaches desperate cases of old blood troubles.

MRS. T. W. LEE.
Isle of of Hope, Savannah, Ga.

S.S.S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers. It possesses penetrating powers that enable it to go down into the blood, and remove the last trace of blood poison. It cures all blood troubles simply and solely because it removes the cause from the circulation. Not only does S.S.S. cure Contagious Blood Poison when first contracted, but reaches it in all stages, even where the trouble has been inherited. S.S.S. is made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and does not contain the slightest trace of mineral in any form. You can get rid of your old blood trouble if you will take S.S.S. and allow it to purify the blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice free.

THE HANGING OF PAT DOOLAN

By MARTHA M'GUIRE.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Pat Doolan was the bravest, handsomest, quickest witted, most reckless harebrained scamp in Ireland. Everybody knew Pat, and every one who knew him loved him. He was always getting into trouble, and his facility for doing so was equaled by his talents for getting out again. His hair was red and curly, his complexion soft and peachy as that of a girl, but he was strong and wiry and not afraid of the devil himself.

Pat was an Irishman and a patriot from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot. He was always getting in the way of the British officials, who willy nilly were obliged to stumble over him, and that meant that he was constantly being brought up before a magistrate for some breach of the law. But the magistrates and the bailiffs all loved him so well that they were always either letting him off openly or conniving at his escape from justice. The trouble is that Pat's escapades were always connected with some movement against British rule, and in this he had a large proportion of the people with him.

But when the rebellion of 17— came on and failed Pat, who had given the government more trouble than any other ten rebels, was tried, found guilty of treason and sentenced to be hanged. There was great lamentation through the country at Pat's fate, and in those parts where he was personally known had the people not just failed at one rebellion they would have started another to save him.

Pat continued to crack his jokes, eat all that was given him—good things came for him in basketfuls to the jail—and drank the health of his jailers when a bottle was smuggled in with the rest. As the day approached for his execution knots of his friends gathered and debated different methods of saving him. Some talked of a rescue, but rescues are seldom successful, especially when those appointed to carry out a sentence are prepared to resist the rescuers. No one could learn whether any of the plans proposed would be undertaken. There were those who looked knowing and those who were full of fight and those whose close tongues—an unusual thing for an Irishman—gave the impression that they were "still waters running deep." But the day for the execution came round, and there was no evidence of any well defined plan to save Pat's life.

Though as many of Pat's friends as wished were permitted to be present at the hanging, there were plenty of officials within call to prevent the possibility of interference with the carrying out of the sentence. Indeed, there were not more than half a dozen of those who loved Pat gathered about the scaffold, and they were there with a cart to remove the body after it had been taken down.

Pat ascended the scaffold with a jaunty step. Eileen McKenna, his sweetheart at the time, had sent him a tremendous flower, which he wore in his buttonhole; his hair had been carefully attended to, though no brush could get the kinks out of it, and he wore a beautiful smile. He approached the rope, examined it, tested it to discern whether it would hold, then tried to get the loop over his head.

"I can't do it," he said, "and if I could I wouldn't hang with any convenience, for the rope is too short. I demand my rights to be honged safely, and there's no safety in that gallows at all, at all."

Taking a cuddy pipe and some tobacco from his pocket, he rubbed the latter between the palms of his hands, filled his pipe, scratched a match on his leg and began to smoke.

The sheriff called some one to improve the gallows, and Pat smoked and pictured to him in words what an inhuman calling was his. "I forgive ye for what you're goin' to do to me," said Pat, "but d'ye think ye'll be forgiven by our patron saint? I have an idee that the hottest part of purgatory is kept for those who make a livin' by stretchin' necks and choppin' off heads. As for me, don't mention it. I wouldn't grudge you the pay ye'll git for makin' me a corpse for a hunder years of life."

The sheriff was much affected by this address and said he'd rather Pat would hang him than be hang Pat.

"How long must I be hangin'?" asked Pat.

"The law says an hour."

"Well, thin, get at it. It's an hour before supper. I'll be too early for it in this world, and I don't want to be too late for it in the other."

As the rope was adjusted Pat's friends crowded up on to the scaffold to bid him goodby. When he was swung off he fell against one of them—purposely in the way—which somewhat broke the fall. When it was over the sheriff turned his back, and while doing so Pat's friends somewhat relieved the strain on his neck by holding him up by the waistband. But this they were only enabled to do when the sheriff was not looking.

At the end of an hour timed by set back watches the body was let down, put in a coffin and run over a rough road to a cart. This was intended to bring Pat to his senses. And it did. He sat up in his coffin and cried at the top of his voice:

"Hurrah for ould Ireland!"

SHOPS AND HOMES

New Model Structure Erected for Artisans in Vienna.

Small Manufacturers Provided with Good Rooms, for Dwellings as Well as for Work—Both Sanitary and Cheap.

Vienna.—In the new jubilee workshops and model dwellings erected at a cost of $500,000, Vienna artisans are provided with excellent sanitary workshops and homes, convenient in every respect and obtainable at rents below those frequently charged for damp, dark, unhealthy quarters. The massively imposing square block in the Margarethen suburb has been provided at the joint expense of the city of Vienna and a special jubilee fund raised for improving the housing of the working classes. The building covers a considerable area, having a large courtyard. It is seven stories high, of steel construction, on the [illegible] plan, thus admitting a large [illegible]. In all it comprises 150 [illegible] workshops and 40 dwellings. [illegible] cost $400,000 and the [illegible].

No expense has been spared and no [illegible] overlooked. The construction [illegible] strong, so that the heaviest machinery can be safely installed on the top floors. There are elevators capable of carrying 2,000 pounds. Each workroom has its own emergency stairway in case of fire or other accident. There is an abundance of [illegible] and toilet room accommodation. The window casements are of [illegible] with a gutter at the bottom to carry off the steam from the glass. There is a plentiful water supply and a good ventilation. The basement [illegible] are protected against damp and the top floors under the roof from heat and cold.

Special facilities are provided for furnishing tenants with electricity or gas for motor power as cheaply as possible. And coal, coke and wood can also be obtained in small quantities at low prices.

The workrooms vary in size considerably, the smallest having an area of from 250 to 300 square feet. The rents work out at from 20 cents to 30 cents per square foot a year, according to the floor. The tenants are mostly small tradesmen employing from 10 to 15 workpeople. A few have only perhaps two or three helpers, while others employ 40 or 45 persons.

At least half the tenants are woodworkers of various kinds, chiefly furniture makers, for whom the location is especially suitable, as the principal furniture stores are in the neighborhood. The other tenants include several metal trades workers, weavers, [illegible], bookbinders and gilders.

The 40 dwellings in the building are reserved primarily for the occupants of the workshops. The accommodation consists only of living room, small bedroom and a kitchen, and the rent is from $6 to $7 a month.

Opened less than six months ago, more than three-quarters of the workshops are already occupied. Both from an economic and hygienic standpoint the new institution promises to be valuable. The workers now gathered there formerly lived in outside districts, so that much time was lost in the shipping out of goods and the collection of orders, materials and the like. Moreover, in many instances, work was carried on in miserable cellars, damp, dark and unsanitary, involving grave injury to the health and constitution of masters and workmen alike. In the jubilee workshops building the utmost attention has been paid to hygiene and sanitation. There is even an ambulance room fitted up with first-aid appliances in case of accidents happening in the building.

Battle Over an Egg.

New York.—A complicated legal case involving the ownership of one egg is up for adjustment in the Flatbush court.

The other day the children of Mrs. Mary Penninger and Mrs. Anna Ganey, playing in a vacant lot, found a newly laid egg. Right of possession of the valuable find is claimed by both women.

"I fully realize what the ownership of an egg means in these times," said the magistrate, "and therefore I will not be hasty. I postpone the case for one week."

NOTED RUSSIAN REVOLUTIONIST

MME. KATHERINE BRESHKOVSKAYA, who pleaded not guilty to the charge of having been criminally active in the Russian revolutionary organization, but added: "I admit that I am a social revolutionist," at the opening of her trial in St. Petersburg, is popularly known as "the mother of the Russian revolution" and "the Russian Joan of Arc." She served 23 years as a hard-labor convict in exile in Siberia, and for two years has been confined in the fortress of SS. Peter and Paul, St. Petersburg. Mme. Breshkovskaya has lectured in the United States, and a petition for her release was sent to the czar two years ago, signed by 50 prominent men in the United States. Mme. Breshkovskaya at the present time is more than 70 years old.

PAY FOR "SMOKES"

New York Women Spend Half Million Yearly for Tobacco.

Spend as Much More Yearly for Jeweled Accessories and Fad Is Growing Rapidly—Dealers Cater to That Trade.

New York.—New York women burned $500,000 last year. From to-day's indications in the business world they will burn even more—in fact, a great deal more—in the year 1910.

Furthermore, the word "burn" is used literally, because these fair New Yorkers actually hold the fuel between thumb and forefinger and set a match to it! Not that the money is in the form of bills from the United States treasury. Nay, it is in the form of cigarettes!

Half a million is a snug sum for women to send up in smoke. The figures are furnished by dealers, and conservative dealers at that. Three of them cater particularly to women. One of them seeks no other trade. To this half million add money spent by women cigarette faddists for smart [illegible] and one has a fair idea of what the cigarette habit costs New York women to-day.

Come from Central park down Fifth avenue for a spin and see: First, snuggled among the conservative brown stone mansions, which once echoed the gentle laughter of the old Knickerbocker aristocracy, one comes upon the atelier of a one time social figure now an importer modiste. Early New Yorkers would have called it a dressmaker's shop. Now it is an atelier, and its patrons always are addressed as "madame."

To-day "madame" is being fitted with a wonderful frock of smoldering grayish rose silk, with amethyst lights. From a cabinet in the corner a tactful saleswoman brings a slender chain of beaten silver, from which depends a quaint case, all studded with amethysts. "Madame" seizes it with eager hands. Dull silver and gems blend perfectly with the oddly tinted gown.

"How much? A hundred? Why, the gown is only $175. Yes, I know—it simply makes the costume perfect. But I've half a dozen cigarette cases already. Yes, that little place for the matches is a dear. Ye-es, I'll take it."

Ask any gown importer whose atelier can boast a cabinet of odd jewelry and trinkets where lie the best profits, and she will answer:

"In the fads of the cigarette smoker."

Time was that a single gold or silver cigarette case attached to a matching chatelaine sufficed for even the most constant cigarette smoker, but to-day the gold case is considered "loud" and the correct thing is a case of dull carved or filigree metal inlaid, or rather incrusted, with gems to match the gown.

Sometimes they come in pairs, these cases; one for cigarettes and one for matches, and especially smart is a new design just over from Berlin showing the head of the kaiser's own proud eagle, sharp beak and gleaming eye, opening at the top to display tiny compartments for small cigarettes and smaller matches.

What is the reason for the astonishing increase of the smoking habit among New York women? Simply this: They took it up because it looked "smart," in much the same way that a small boy takes his first smoke. In much the same way, too, it has grown on them, until now they are wrecking their nerves with nicotine, to say nothing of squandering great sums of money. It is no longer a fad with women, this smoking—a woman must have her after-breakfast puff just as much as she must have her breakfast. Sometimes she can get along without the food much more easily than without her cigarette. Thousands of women in New York smoke from fifteen to twenty cigarettes a day.

Deer Driving Away Caribou

Maine Game Wardens Declare That Not a Single Animal Is Left in the Whole State.

Bangor, Me.—"There ain't a single caribou left in the whole state of Maine," says Game Warden "Cy" Adams. "I have seen a great many deer and moose, but no caribou, because there weren't none there. I guess they've got the Canada fever, and the herds I used to see around here are now in New Brunswick or Quebec. They are heading further north, for caribou won't stand civilization like deer, and they won't live in pairs here and there like moose.

"It's the deer that are driving them away. There are more deer in Maine to-day than there used to be in the time of the Indians. Then the wild animals were just in the right proportion, and didn't butt into each other's rights. The natural food of the caribou is moss. Moose live on the large branches of trees principally, and deer chew small twigs and branches, grass and such like.

"Now, deer have grown so plentiful that they don't find enough of their own kind of food, so they eat the moss on which caribou used to feed. Consequently the caribou got hungry and disgusted and quit. That's why moose and caribou or moose and deer get on all right in the same territory, but caribou and deer don't get along any better together than cattle and sheep out west, and for the same reason. There's other reasons why caribou have left this state, where they used to be plentiful. Caribou are shy animals, to begin with. They won't hang around where there's lumbering going on, and there's hardly a corner of the state where the woods are not full of lumbermen."

All the world loves a lover, but not with the love a lover loves his love.

Dynamite Used in Plowing

Oklahoma Farmers Evolve Novel Plan of Breaking Virgin Fields—Proves Effective.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Farmers in Texas county, this state, are trying a unique but effective way of breaking virgin sod, introduced by C. H. Phillips.

After boring holes in the ground about 20 feet apart and three feet deep, Phillips placed a stick of dynamite in each. These were connected and shot at the same time. The ground was torn up and will be left to absorb nature until plow time.

Mr. Phillips believes that the ground deep down, will conserve the moisture. On the ground which he has thus treated, he says he will put out in a small way, diversified crops and note carefully the result of the new method of breaking soil.

The experiment will be watched with considerable interest, as it is the first trial of the kind in the state. Farmers have generally plowed their ground deep, but the method employed by Mr. Phillips and others is new in soil cultivation.

NO WONDER THAT HE'S RICH

Aged Man, Worth $13,000,000, Spends But Seventy-Five Cents a Day on Honeymoon.

San Francisco.—Loren Coburn, 84 years old, blessed with a fortune valued at $13,000,000, spent the first days of his honeymoon with his bride, who was Miss Sarah Upton, his sister-in-law, and admits having passed her fifty-eighth birthday, in a little room in a lodging house, for which he pays 75 cents per day.

Coburn and Miss Upton were married Tuesday. The bridegroom is a California pioneer, and of late has been engaged in litigation over his land, which extends for leagues, embracing 28,000 acres of rich and fertile lands. Two years ago Coburn's nephew, Azro Coburn of Boston, asked that he be declared incompetent, and Carl Coburn, another nephew, was appointed his guardian.

The elder Coburn fought the case through all the courts of the state, and won.

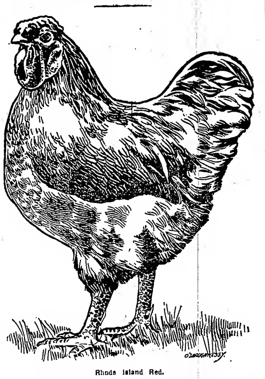
Must Pay Insurance Back.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Her husband having turned up alive and well after she had buried a corpse found in the river as that of the missing man, Mrs. Jacobini Schmidt did not make any defense in the Camden district court to the suit of the Prudential Insurance Company for the recovery of $500 paid on a policy on Schmidt's life. Judge Jones directed that judgment be entered for the full amount. Mrs. Schmidt expended $150 in giving the corpse a decent burial and when her husband several weeks later walked into her home she refused to effect a reconciliation. Schmidt is now tending bar in Philadelphia.

The reason so many people fall in love is they want to do what so many other people do.

MANY PRACTICAL POINTS OF RHODE ISLAND RED

One Writer's Strong Argument in Favor of This Celebrated Strain of Fowls—Make Rapid Growth.



Rhode Island Red.

(By E. T. DE GRAF.)

After 16 years' experience with fowls I have concluded that Rhode Island Reds combine more practical qualities and fewer undesirable ones than any of the 20 varieties I have kept.

Their popularity is due to their rapid growth, oblong bodies, with wide, plump breasts and yellow skins.

Besides their early maturity, they are very hardy and lay large eggs, especially in winter. As mothers they compare favorably with Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes.

In raising these birds to table sizes, the following is my regular practice: In a corner of the house cellar is an asbestos-lined incubator room.

When a hatch is made, 50 of the liveliest chicks are removed at about 30 hours old in the afternoon and placed in a thoroughly clean, lice-proof painted brooder, each chick having its bill dipped in water to teach it to drink. The other chicks remain in the incubator until next morning.

The first feed consists of stale bread soaked in either sweet or sour milk and squeezed out.

The second day they are given range of the brooder scratching floor, upon which is scattered sand and charcoal dust, with some litter.

Until they are six weeks old they get mostly chick feed in the litter and charcoal, grit and meat scrap in a hopper. All utensils are kept scrupulously clean; they are boiled once a week. The chicks are fond of dry wheat bran, which is always before them. Feed little and often is the rule. Milk is often given in addition to water. All liquids are protected so the chicks cannot wet themselves.

I know of no breed that possesses more vitality right from the shell. One of the reasons for this is that the chicks feather out rather slowly until about two months old.

Most of the food goes toward making flesh, bone and muscle instead of feathers.

In this respect the Reds are superior to those breeds that feather out young.

When three weeks old the chicks weigh about eight ounces and when they reach the first broiler stage at six weeks they weigh about 1¼ pounds. Two weeks later they weigh about two pounds.

At this age the cockerel is commercially more profitable if plump and hatched at the right season than he ever will be afterward, if feed and care are considered. In the roasting stage at three months they weigh three pounds and will gain a pound per month thereafter until they weigh five pounds.

In this stage they appear awkward because of their rapid growth and development of their second feathers, but their well-shaped bodies and long, plump, white breasts make them very attractive when dressed for market.

Selection of the Boar.

No matter how many sows are kept on the farm, the selection of the boar is of great importance. There are many pure bred hogs in all parts of the country, so there is no reason for the use of a scrub boar by anyone, says the Swineherd.

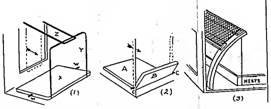
The character of the get of a scrub boar is guesswork, whereas with the pure bred boar there is some assurance that his get will be uniform and of a quality indicated by his ancestors. When possible the boar should be selected on the place where he was raised.

Successful Breeder.

The breeder of to-day who succeeds must be a breeder, a feeder and an all around stock man.

The popularity of the show ring is educating the masses to quality, and nothing but the best will justify the breeding enterprise.

GOOD FORM OF TRAP NEST



Three forms of trap nests used by English poultrymen are shown in the above illustration. In No. 1 a tilting wire arrangement is used; X is a pivot-hung board, with stout wire, Y, supporting Z, the trap wire which falls across the hen's entry, and is usually held there by an iron rod, which drops after it into a slot. The hen's weight on the nest side of board, X, tilts the wire, Y, and releases the trap wire, Z, which falls to the dotted position. Illustration 2 shows another method; while 3 shows a shallow tray hung on pivots or hooks at the side for the nest. At one front corner an upright wire, E, rises through a hole in one of the curved bearers which carry the curved shutter, consisting of two wood rails, carrying fine wire netting, D. The hen, entering, steps on front of the nest, which, dropping, carries the wire down and releases the trap, the latter sliding down the curved bearers imprisons the hen, who can, however, see out.

IMPORTANCE OF DAIRY SCHOOLS

Young Men Learn to Work Intelligently, and Then Continue Their Own Education by Reading.

(By B. E. LARA.)

It is possible that there is many a young man who has worked a couple of years under a good butter maker or cheese maker who never went to any dairy school, and who, in the pride of his success, makes light of their value, just as he does the dairy papers.

This young man is liable to hesitate to "lose" (as he calls it) the time and wages, and the saved-up capital necessary to take a term at the dairy school.

We use the term "lose" because we have heard that expression used by many of the class referred to above; the proper word is "invest," and a mighty good investment that few men take one term but that they are anxious to take another.

The value of the dairy school is not so much in what the students actually learn in practice and theory, but that they learn to work with their brain more, learn to work intelligently, and learn to continue their own education by reading technical papers and books and thus acquire a desire for an investigation of the whys and wherefores of every little phenomenon observable during their daily work.

It is not only for the teachers that they receive their education, but it is from their fellow students, who have worked under various conditions; indeed, we feel inclined to believe that this is really the most valuable part of the course.

We do not hesitate to urge the young men in the creameries and cheese factories, as well as all young farmers, to attend the dairy schools, even at a most serious sacrifice. It will be the best investment they will ever be able to make.

NO HEALTHY SKIN LEFT

My little son, a boy of five, broke out with an itching rash. Three doctors prescribed for him, but he kept getting worse until we could not dress him any more. They finally advised me to try a certain medical college, but its treatment did no good. At the time I was induced to try Cuticura he was so bad that I had to cut his hair off and put the Cuticura Ointment on him on bandages, as it was impossible to touch him with the bare hand. There was not one square inch of skin on his whole body that was not affected. He was one mess of sores. The bandages used to stick to his skin and in removing them it used to take the skin off with them, and the screams from the poor child were heartbreaking. I began to think that he would never get well, but after the second application of Cuticura Ointment I began to see signs of improvement, and with the third and fourth applications the sores commenced to dry up. His skin peeled off twenty times, but it finally yielded to the treatment. Now I can say that he is entirely cured, and a stronger and healthier boy you never saw than he is to-day, twelve years or more since the cure was effected. Undesirable Acquisition.

A scientist who lost his pet dog put a little notice in the paper headed, "Warning," which charitably described the animal as having "strayed," and added:

"It is of no value, not even to the owner; but, having been experimented upon for scientific purposes with many virulent poisons, a lick from its tongue—and it is very affectionate—would probably prove fatal."

The dog came back next day.

Farm School Letter

Interesting Information on Minnesota Agriculture by Our Special Correspondent.

Agricultural Engineering.

In the Department of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota, there was created in May, 1908, a Division of Agricultural Engineering.

An important part of the work of this division is the class work in the College. Under this instruction young men are taught the principles of road-making and drainage; they learn how to do road work under differing conditions, how to construct drains, the advantages and disadvantages of open drains in comparison with under drainage, and methods of land surveys.

The primary object of this Division, however, is to collect and disseminate information on the control of soil moisture for the improvement of farm lands.

Some special work has been done during the past year and experimental drainage systems have been inaugurated in the Minnesota Valley, the Red River Valley and near Duluth, and it is hoped that other experimental work can be arranged for in various parts of the state where special problems are to be solved.

Correspondence from farmers in regard to drainage improvements, completed or proposed, will be welcomed by Prof. J. T. Stewart, chief of this Division, at University Farm, St. Paul.

Sheep And Their Teeth.

Prof. Gaumnitz, of the Division of Animal Husbandry, at University Farm, St. Paul, says that fine wool sheep live longer than medium or coarse wool sheep. The former have been used successfully as breeders from 1 to 5 years, and the latter from 1 to 6, and more rarely 7 years. This indicates the extreme period of usefulness in the flock. The prime of life probably extends from 1 to 5 or 6 years.

The lamb has a short and small head as opposed to the head of the mature sheep. Its teeth are smaller in every way. They are usually smooth and white as opposed to a more corrugated, darkened surface in the old sheep. The age of sheep is told by the four pair of incisors which are found only on the lower front jaw. These are all present by the time the lamb is six weeks old.

In the yearling the central pair of small incisor teeth are replaced with a large pair when the lamb is ten to fourteen months old. They are almost twice as wide and much longer than those at either side.

At three years it gets a third pair of large teeth. It would then have three pairs of large teeth and one pair of small or lamb teeth.

The four years old has a full mouth of four pairs of large teeth. The outer ones are never as large as those in the center.

After the sheep is four years old it is difficult to tell the exact age. With age the teeth usually grow longer and narrower. They begin at six years to resemble shoe pegs. Sheep that are living on short pasturage and get sand with their grass wear their teeth short, even in old age. This is unusual in Minnesota. When sheep get long, peg like, or broken teeth, it is time to dispose of them.

Cost Of Producing Farm Products.

The Minnesota Experiment Station, in cooperation with The Bureau of Statistics of The United State Department of Agriculture, has been gathering statistics on twenty or more Minnesota farms for the past seven years. The object of this work is to determine the cost of producing the various farm products under farm conditions. To get this data a man has visited the same farms each working day in the year and has recorded all business transactions, and the labor done on the farm the previous day by all members of the family and by the horses. In this manner accurate data regarding the cost of producing any of the common farm products has been secured. This data has been published by the bureau of statistics and may be secured free by writing to the Bureau of Statistics, Washington, D. C., and asking for Bulletin No. 73, on "The Cost of Producing Minnesota Farm Products."

Seed Corn And The Pulpit.

Iowa, like Nebraska, is having trouble with her seed corn, and so serious has the problem become that outlines of sermons to be preached from the pulpits in Iowa have been sent to the preachers with the request that sermons be preached on the subject, so that the importance of procuring absolutely reliable seed can be brought to the attention of as many farmers as possible. These sermon outlines give suggestions for testing the germinating power of seed corn. Iowa holds that no other subject is of so much importance to the state as this. With so serious a condition prevailing in the older corn states, the warning the Minnesota Experiment Station is giving to our own people is timely. For some weeks the Department of Agriculture of this state has been sending information about seed corn testing to the farmers, and is now forwarding posters, newspapers and letters to all parts of the state showing with photographs of the apparatus needed for testing, the method of testing, together with detailed information about the use of germinators. If any farmer has failed to receive this literature let him write to the Department of Agriculture, University Farm, St Paul, and he will be fully advised Write now.

Let the Water Off.

In hundreds of cases where drainage is desirable it is not necessary to employ an engineer to lay out the work, nor to use expensive systems of excavation. Much of this work can be done by the farmer himself after the exercise of a little thoughtfulness. When the snow melts in the spring, or after a heavy rain in summer—any time when there is standing water on the field—let the farmer go over his land and determine if the water, at its height, seeks a natural runway. It is easy to see where water would escape if a few places are leveled down to a point below the water above them. Place stakes at these high places, and as soon as the ground will permit of working, get busy with a team, plow and scraper and cut down those high places. When another rain comes see if the water flows off. If not, observe where the high places are and again go over them with team and scraper. Begin work at the lower end of the natural water course and work up towards the sloughs. There may be places where greater excavation may be required, and this can often be done with a spade at seasons of the year when there is a lull in other work. Open ditch work of this character for a few years will relieve many fields of wet and unproductive places now existing, and the farmer will scarcely realize the cost, while the expense of cultivating the entire field will be reduced and its productiveness increased.

Oats For Seed.

In selecting seed oats this spring the farmers are invited to try the oats distributed by the Minnesota Experiment Station at St. Anthony Park. These were selected and grown for their high yield and have been quite generally distributed throughout the state and are known as Minnesota No. 26. The No. 26 has averaged 66.6 bushels per acre during the past 15 years at University Farm. The Station Farm will sell these oats in lots of five bushels or less, for $1.00 per bushel. Address Prof. A. Boss, Experiment Station, University Farm, St. Paul.

Campaign Of Education.

The Extension Division of the Minnesota Department of Agriculture regards the testing of seed corn of such vital importance to the farmers of Minnesota that in a few days it will distribute large posters showing by photographs how to test seed corn and giving full instructions in regard to the work, so that each farmer may be enabled to test for himself. These posters will be sent to the banks throughout the state, to railroad stations, creameries, etc., to get the matter as far as possible before the people in abundant season for them to make early germination tests. The division regards the matter of testing seed as exceedingly important this year, and will give all the help it can to everybody who wishes it. Write for information, look for the posters, read the papers. The Division is availing itself of every possible channel of getting this information before the people.

Winter Wheat.

The Minnesota Experiment Station suggests conservatism in sowing winter wheat, and would advise farmers to give it a good test on a small acreage for a couple of years before determining to grow, on a large scale, or relying upon it for a profitable crop. Winter wheat has been grown as far north as Polk County, while in the southern part of the state it has been grown in considerable quantities in certain localities, but not extensively enough to warrant the station in recommending it as a general crop. Minnesota grown seed should be used always. Where a hardy variety has become acclimated, larger profits and a greater yield have resulted than from spring wheat. Among the varieties of winter wheat recommended by the Station, and tested there, are Turkey Red (Minn. No. 529), Bearded Fife (Minn. No. 550), and Russian White (Minn. No. 642. The Station advises Minnesota winter wheats to be sown not later than Sept. 1st, to enable the plants to develop strong roots before cold weather. Unless the soil is very wet the station would have the farmers sow their winter wheat in standing corn since the grain will be better protected through the winter and spring, than if sown on land plowed in the fall.

Olmsted County School Fair.

Olmsted county is awake to the interests of agriculture in her schools. She is now out with programs for the fall exhibition of her young people's efforts, with an engraving showing J. J. Hill speaking to the fair last fall. The fair will be held in September, and substantially under the auspices of the young people, though of course it is managed by the older heads. All the entries are to be made by the boys and girls. They can exhibit everything grown on the farm to the exclusion of their parents, except where there are no young folks in the family. There are to be addresses by men of national prominence. Olmsted County is doing nothing not open to every county in the state.

Worm Turns at Last

It was the old story. The one we have all seen repeated so many, many times. Two young women entered the car together and the tired-looking man arose and proffered his seat. Then, while he groped unsteadily for a strap, the usual conversation ensued:

"Oh, thank you, sir."

"Thank you so much."

"Sit down, dear."

"No, you sit down."

"I insist, dear; I'm not a bit tired."

"Neither am I, and I'd just as soon stand."

"Go ahead, dear, and take it."

"No, no, you take it. I—"

And then the tired man did what so many have wanted to see done so many, many times. He took it himself.

As he sank wearily but calmly back in his seat the smiles of mutual benev-

The KITCHEN CABINET

"Cheeriness is a thing to be more profoundly grateful for than all that genius ever inspired or talent ever accomplished. Next best to natural, spontaneous cheeriness is deliberate, intended and persistent cheeriness, which we can create, can cultivate and can so foster and cherish that after a few years the world will never suspect that it was not an hereditary gift."

Be Forehanded.

The reason of so many failures in housekeeping and such hit or miss meal making is because of lack of preparation. Now where does system so well pay for itself as in housekeeping?

Plan the meals a week ahead, modifying them of course to fit the needs. Study the right combination of foods and do not have a heavy cream soup on the day when you have plenty of meat in the dinner, for a cream soup is very satisfying and may be used when "three were invited, here come nine."

There is no waste in the kitchen of the forehanded woman. She uses the coarser stalks of celery for soups and sauces, even saving the leaves for a flavor of soup stock.

The outside of the cabbage is cooked, while the more delicate inside portions are used for the fresh salad the next day.

When buying a rib roast, call for the bones. You have paid for them and they may be used in soup stock.

Weigh the meat as it comes from the market to see that it is correct. Then weigh it after it is cooked and then weigh the bones and gristle to see what is waste. In this way we learn to buy meat that is as free from waste as possible, for bone is costly when we pay as much for it as we do for meat.

It is usually best to buy potatoes and apples in quantities if one has a suitable place to keep them.

The forehanded woman keeps account of the supplies and orders before all is quite gone.

Household Hints.

When making a white sauce for a vegetable, make a double quantity, save the time and it will be just as good for some other combination for another meal.

When preparing a custard leave out the sugar until it is all made, then divide it, using part of it with the sugar for a custard, the rest for a salad dressing with the seasonings of salt, pepper and mustard.

And a mean old world if you're small;
It's a world full of hate
For the foolish who prate
Of the uselessness of it all."
—S. E. Kiser.

For the Vegetarian.

As meat is one of our most expensive foods, it is well to be able to substitute in our dietaries other foods equally as valuable and less costly.

Milk, eggs, cheese, beans and nuts are foods that take the place of meat. Milk has been called the perfect food, as it contains all the food principles, yet for an adult it is not desirable, as more solid food is needed to exercise the muscles of the digestive tract.

Even at the high price of eggs, they are equal in food value to meat, always remembering that there is no waste to eggs as there is in bones and fats of meat. Eggs in combination with milk as custard or in the form of omelets make wholesome dishes. Cheese is a highly concentrated food which has twice as large a proportion of nutrients as the same amount of meat. It is often difficult of digestion, because it is so compact. It may be used to advantage grated with the addition of a pinch of soda, which helps to soften it and so aid digestion.

As a larger proportion of fat is needed than is supplied by these foods, a free use of vegetable oils, like olive oil and the oil of nuts to dress the salads, should be used.

Baked beans with olive oil to take the place of pork will be found very satisfactory. With such a variety of vegetables to be used as food and flavors there is a great field for the ingenious to develop new dishes. Bread browned, sugar caramelized, onions and mushrooms all being nutritious, add flavor to different foods as well. The mushroom and the peppers with tomatoes are adding their delicious flavors to give variety to the vegetarians' diet.

A delicious nut bread which may be used for sandwiches is made as follows:

Take half a cup of sugar, one cupful of milk, two cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of salt, one egg well beaten and three-fourths of a cupful of walnut meats coarsely cut. Let stand 20 minutes, then bake in a loaf 45 minutes.

WELL KIDNEYS KEEP THE BODY WELL.

Every Picture Tells a Story

When the kidneys do their duty, the blood is filtered clear of uric acid and other waste. Weak kidneys do not filter off all the bad matter. This is the cause of rheumatic pains, backache and urinary disorders. Doan's Kidney Pills cure weak kidneys.

Rev. Abram Weaver, Gangratown, Tex., former editor Baptist Herald, says: "At a Baptist conference at Jackson, Tex., I fell from a platform and hurt my back. I was soon over the injury, but the kidneys were badly disordered, passages painful and often bloody. Doan's Kidney Pills cured this trouble completely."

Marriage.

A game of chance in which the chances are about even. The man leads at first, but after leaving the altar he usually follows breathlessly in his wife's trail. The rules are very confusing. If a masked player holds you up some night at the end of a long gun, it is called "robbery" and entitles you to telephone the police; but if your wife holds you up for a much larger amount the next morning at the end of a long hug, it is termed "diplomacy" and counts in her favor. In this, as in other games of life, wives are usually allowed more privileges than other outlaws.—Judge.

Have You Tried?

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? We can furnish positive proof that it has made many remarkable cures after all other means had failed.

Women who are suffering with some form of female illness should consider this.

As such evidence read these two unsolicited testimonial letters. We guarantee they are genuine and honest statements of facts.

Cresson, Pa.—"Five years ago I had a bad fall, and hurt myself inwardly. I was under a doctor's care for nine weeks, and when I stopped I grew worse again. I sent for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, took it as directed, and now I am a stout, hearty woman."—Mrs. Ella E. Aikey, Cresson, Pa.

Baird, Wash.—"A year ago I was sick with kidney and bladder troubles and female weakness. The doctors gave me up. All they could do was to just let me go as easily as possible. I was advised by friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier. I am completely cured of my ills, and I am nearly sixty years old."—Mrs. Sarah Leighton, Baird, Wash.

Evidence like the above is abundant showing that the derangements of the female organism which breed all kinds of miserable feelings and which ordinary practice does not cure, are the very disorders that give way to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are afflicted with similar troubles, after reading two such letters as the above, should be encouraged to try this wonderfully helpful remedy.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

WESTERN CANADA

What J. J. Hill, the Great Railroad Magnate, Says About its Wheat-Producing Power:

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

"The greatest need of this country [United States] in another generation or two will be the providing of homes for its people and producing sufficient for them. The days of our prominence as a wheat exporting country are gone. Canada is to be the great wheat country."

This great railroad magnate is taking advantage of the situation by extensive railway building to the wheat fields of Western Canada.

Upwards of 125 Million Bushels of Wheat were harvested in 1909. Average of the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be upwards of 23 bushels per acre.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre), are to be had in the choicest districts.

Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured; mixed farming a success. Write as to best place for settlement, settlers' low railway rates, descriptive illustrated "Last Best West" (sent free on application), and other information, to Sup't of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to the Canadian Government Agent.

Pass Along The Good Word

That Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is to-day and has, for over 40 years, been the standard Blood-purifyer, Stomach Strengthener and Liver Invigorator sold by druggists. It's not a secret nostrum but a medicine of known composition—a medicine so good that the best physicans prescribe it knowing that its ingredients, which are printed on its outside wrappers and attested under oath, are the best known to medical science for the diseases for which it is advised.

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not his greater profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, In Plain English; or, Medicine Simplified, 1008 pages, over 700 illustrations, newly revised up-to-date Edition, paper-bound, sent for 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only. Cloth-bound, 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Farmers Interested in the Proposition to Grow More Potatoes.

Many Acres Will be Planted to Potatoes This Season.

The proposition for the erection of a potato warehouse in red Lake Falls is being favorably considered by the farmers tributary to Red Lake Falls and there is little doubt that the building will be put up.

Farmers that have already reported give assurances that 300 acres will be planted by them and there are many yet to be heard from. Farmers from the Wylie and Lambert country have not yet reported and the local merchants would like to hear from them.

It is believed that there is no doubt that 400 acres will be planted to potatoes and that the building will be erected this summer.

Peter Morrisette of Plummer was in town Tuesday. He was accompanied by his mother who remained here to spend a few days with relatives and friends.

TELL YOUR SECRETS TO THE ENUMERATOR

Federal Census Enumeration is to Commence Tomorrow.

E. G. Buse is the Official Counter For Red Lake Falls City.

The official nose counting will commence tomorrow. In the counting of noses, as in the marketing of eggs, there will be no discrimination as to the sizes. All noses count alike and there won't be any bad—officially bad—noses as in the case of eggs. Since all noses count alike, the fellow who has a nice blossom on his'n won't have any advantage and the "roming nose" will be counted in only one place no matter how much it tries to spread around.

E. G. Buse will be the official counter for Red Lake Falls city. He is already quite a noted connoisseur of noses and is familiar with all of the forty-seven varieties in the city and there is no doubt that the counting will be well done.

Don't be afraid to answer the enumerator's questions. He will be quite nosey, to be sure, but Uncle Sam has given his word that none of the information that you are separated from will ever be used to get you into the penitentiary.

Tell your secrets to the enumerator.

STAND-PAT OR INSURGENT?

What Crowd Will be in Control of Republican State Convention?

A Question That is Agitating the Politicians of the State.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St Paul, April 12—The friends of Senator Clapp are congratulating themselves on the prospect of success for the move engineered by the federal office holding crowd to have the Republican state convention commit the party to Senator Clapp's renomination. Already they boast that Frank Kellogg has taken to the woods, for of course everybody knows what it means when he expresses a willingness to sacrifice himself and his present political prospects to party harmony.

Rampant Insurgency.

Whether Mr. Kellogg's effacing himself will insure harmony, however, is an entirely different proposition. There isn't any question that Clapp's present pronounced insurgency finds but small favor with those who now assume to lead the Republican party in Minnesota. The other day in Indiana Senator Beveridge drew the line between the administration and Republicans of his way of thinking so broad that it can't very well be ignored. Beveridge said as plainly as a man could put it in words that, so far as the tariff was concerned President Taft was on one side of that line and he was on the other. Whereupon Clapp clapped Beveridge on the back and told him that he was with him to the finish.

The Local Stand-pat Attitude.

That, say the local standpatters who are pulling the wires, may all be very well as play to the galleries. It may indeed go down with the unsophisticated and be good stuff to feed to the country gulls: but where does it leave us? Such a thing was never known in Minnesota as a failure of the Republican convention to endorse the national administration with all its works. It's got to be done this time. We need it in our business. In seven of the nine congressional districts in the state we're going to have a fight on our hands. It's no use to us to elect a state ticket unless we elect the governor. Ther's nothing to it. We can't elect a governor unless we have an organiza-

REP. CONVENTION

STATE REPUBLICANS DECIDE UPON LATE DATE FOR STATE MEETING.

TO BE HELD ON JUNE 23

Republican Leaders Who Advocate a Short Campaign Bring About Change To Later Date.

St. Paul. — The Republican state central committee met Saturday in the Merchants' hotel and took luncheon, the business meeting following. Practically everything was settled before the gathering was called to order by Chairman A. D. Brown, but there was still some difference over the date for the convention. Some advocated June 23, and others held out for June 15. Still others favored July 6, but after a long discussion June 23 is selected.

Going to St. Paul.

The location will be St. Paul. Sentiment was strong for that city, and the Minneapolis invitation was read without an effort to land the prize for the metropolis.

There was some debate over the basis of apportionment, but the favorite seemed to be taken on the average vote for seven candidates on the state ticket in 1908. This makes a convention of 1,075 delegates and gives Hennepin county only eighty-nine, while Ramsey will have sixty-seven. The cities would get a much better deal under the Taft vote and protested against the injustice, but the country members were unwilling to yield anything to the cities. The county option influence was strong in the committee for the smaller convention because it would reduce the influence of the larger centers.

Will Indorse Senator.

No fight developed against the proposition of Senator Clapp's friends, who have a resolution prepared to include the indorsement of a senator in the call. W. H. Grimshaw, United States marshal, and Clapp's manager in the previous campaigns, sat in the committee meeting with the proxy of George H. Sullivan, of Stillwater, to look after the senator's interest.

It was expected that June 15 would be the date, but advocates of a short campaign objected. As a compromise June 23 has been decided upon and the clans will gather in the St. Paul Auditorium.

STATE WANTS PATENT.

Attorney General Simpson Will Hurry Title to Swamp Land.

St. Paul.—Attorney General George T. Simpson has gone to Washington to present the state's side in the Shevlin-Carpenter timber trespass case when it comes up for a hearing before the United States supreme court. Simpson went to Washington early in March to argue the case, but it was postponed on account of the Standard Oil case.

While in Washington, Mr. Simpson will also take up with the interior department the patenting to the state of about 100,000 acres of swamp land which the state claims in the Indian reservations. The state claimed about 200,000 acres, which had originally been given to the state in the swamp land grant, but before it was surveyed and selected was given to the Indians in the reservations.

After three or four years of argument with the interior department, the state's claim has been upheld and from time to time patents have been given the state to parts of the land. At present the state has received the deed to a little over 100,000 acres, but there is nearly as much left. Although the state's claim has been upheld, the deeds are slow in coming, and State Auditor Iverson is anxious to get the patents as soon as possible.

He believes there is considerable trespassing, as much of the land is timbered, but until the state gets the patents this cannot be stopped. Mr. Iverson and Mr. Simpson had a conference on the matter yesterday afternoon before Simpson left for Washington.

NEW LADING BILL IN USE.

St. Paul. — The Minnesota state uniform bill of lading has gone into effect. One of the provisions is that bills of lading shall be eight and one-half inches in width and 11 inches in length. Order bills of lading must be printed on yellow paper and straight bills of lading on white paper.

It is understood that railroads and shippers will be given a reasonable length of time to conform to the law before prosecutions are brought. The penalty provided is a fine of not more than $1,000 and imprisonment for not more than one year for every carrier, officer, agent or servant knowingly violating the law.

DO NOT INDICT YANCEY.

Grand Rapids Recorder and Other Accused Get "No Bills."

Duluth.—The grand jury of Itasca county has failed to indict W. C. Yancey, village recorder at Grand Rapids, held at a preliminary hearing on a charge of arson, suspected of trying to burn the village hall.

Matt Mearle, of Nashwauk, who shot and killed Joe Persuvich last month, was exonerated, it being found the shooting was in self-defense.

CRITICISMS NOT JUSTIFIED.

Directors of School for Blind Indorse Management.

Minneapolis, March 31.—The course of instruction at the state institution for the deaf and blind at Faribault was increased by one year, at the meeting of the board of directors.

It was also represented that as a result of the recent agitation and exploitation of newspapers, the institution was proved to be upon a better basis than ever before.

MINNEAPOLIS COLISEUM.

Movement to Build Monster Convention Hall.

Minneapolis. — Public unanimous approval of the project for a coliseum was voiced by Mayor Haynes and a score of representative men at a meeting in the Commercial club rooms.

A committee of seven will be appointed soon to consider the general architectural scheme of the building, its cost and location. Means for raising funds are being considered now and the committee will begin an immediate search for a site.

Mayor Haynes, Wallace G. Nye, commissioner of public affairs of the club, L. B. Edwood, J. F. Conklin and F. E. Murphy spoke at length on the proposition and the rest of the gathering expressed approval of the scheme and urged the necessity for starting building at once.

Mr. Nye outlined the need for the building briefly. Many applications are received by the Commercial club from state and national conventions and shows the inevitable result in the past has been that many have been turned down because of inadequate space to accommodate them.

Prestige that will accrue to the city as a convention center, money that great gatherings will bring to the city, and the general civic necessity of the coliseum were discussed at length. It was agreed that dispatch is necessary because the state conservation and development congress will be held in Minneapolis next winter.

The following composed the booster committee that started the ball rolling. They will hear the report of the sub-committee next Monday:

Mayor James C. Haynes, W. L. Harris, T. G. Ingersoll, H. I. DaFoe, A. E. Zonne, A. B. Chamberlain, F. E. Murphy, J. F. Conklin, L. B. Elwood, W. L. Badger, A. L. Skiles, J. T. Elwell, H. F. Newhall, A. E. Barker, Robert Reed, J. D. Holtzerman, C. A. Johnson, C. N. Chadburn, M. S. Mathews, R. D. Cone, Wallace G. Nye and E. J. Westlake.

GAS TANK EXPLODES.

Waconia City Marshal Rams Municipal Carbide Plant.

Marshal Michael Zahler was preparing to generate gas—his duty every day—when in some unknown manner there was a terrific explosion, which blew out the windows and doors and tore a large portion of the brick wall of the gas house down.

Marshal Zahler was thrown against a wall and seriously burned about the face and hands, and it is a miracle he was not instantly killed. His face is blackened beyond recognition. The attending physicians say they can save his eyesight.

A small fire resulted from the explosion, and the volunteer fire department was called out, who extinguished the blaze.

It seems Zahler was loosening up some of the carbide which had become tightly lodged in the generator and the iron rod which he was using caused a spark, igniting the gas.

The gas plant is situated in the heart of the village, directly in the rear of the new city hall, and is surrounded by residences. Had the larger tanks exploded there would have been serious destruction of property and loss of life.

There is some agitation by residents residing in the vicinity, and a petition will probably be signed asking the council to move the gas plant to the outskirts of the village.

SEEDING ENDS EARLY.

Winona.—By the middle of the present week wheat seeding operations in Southern Minnesota and South Dakota along the lines of the North-Western road will be completed. The second crop report this year was issued from the office of General Agent A. C. Johnson, of the North-Western.

It follows:

During the past week weather conditions have been favorable. Wednesday a heavy rain with snow and sleet and the temperature above freezing over all South Dakota and Western Minnesota, retarded seeding operations but one day.

Wheat seeding over the entire line 75 per cent completed, and will all be finished within the next three or four days, and other seeding operations are also in progress under favorable conditions, making the earliest season known, conditions considered.

The early seeded wheat is now above the ground over the entire line, much of it above the ground in March, and with the entire favorable ground and weather conditions, all grain seeded will advance rapidly.

E. J. Westlake Resigns.

Minneapolis.—E. J. Westlake, for eight years secretary and treasurer of the Minneapolis Commercial club, will resign his position to become manager of the Minneapolis branch of the Wm. B. Joyce Investment Company of St. Paul. Mr. Westlake is in Chicago seeking a successor.

THIRD R. R. BRIDGE BURNED.

Officials Suspect Incendiarism in Vicinity of Owatonna.

Owatonna. — The third railway bridge within a week to be burned in the vicinity has caused officials to suspect incendiarism. The 50-foot bridge on the Rock Island, north of the city, burned, and every evidence showed that the bridge was set on fire. All trains were delayed and traffic from the north interrupted.

Postoffice Is Looted.

Clara City.—Robbers broke into the postoffice here, carrying the safe about a quarter of a mile and blowing it open with nitroglycerin. The safe contained about $40 in cash, which the robbers took, leaving a quantity of stamps, books and papers. They then escaped by stealing one of the mail carrier's horses and a buggy. A horse covered with sweat was caught near Montevideo and it is believed the cracksmen are headed that way.

GET BIG GRAFTER

PROBE IS NEARING END

Alleged Bribe Giver, Who is Wealthy Banker and Manufacturer Will Be Tried in New York if Extradition Fails.

Pittsburg, April 7.—The district attorney and his staff were busy today with the grand jury, presenting what is believed to be the last square in the puzzle plot which when completed will, it is believed, make one of the most sensational graft pictures ever brought to the light of the public.

To fill vacancies in the council made by the resignation of its indicted members Mayor Magee has called a special election for April 26.

The ordered indictment of Frank N. Hoffstot, the banker and manufacturer, now living in New York, is the one topic discussed today in the graft exposure. Hoffstot's extradition, according to the district attorney, will be asked for, but in the event of the failure of that procedure, it is reported he will be tried in New York state.

The climax promised in the Pittsburg graft exposures came, as promised, late yesterday, with the presentment by the grand jury of a long report in which is recommended the indictment of Frank N. Hoffstot, president of the Pressed Steel Car Co., and one of the most prominent business men in the country.

Simultaneously in open court came a plea of Emil Winter, president of the Workingman's Savings and Trust Co., that he had no defense to make to the charge, that he gave a $20,000 bribe to Councilman Morris Einstein.

SCORE MERRY DEL VAL.

The Roosevelt Incident Still is Talk of Rome.

Rome, April 7.—Some of the prominent ecclesiastics who were received by the pope today managed to introduce the subject of the Roosevelt incident, to these the pope expressed the deepest regret that he had been prevented from meeting and speaking with the former president, but he gave utterance to no opinion regarding the negotiations of the deadlock that followed.

The incident continues to be a live topic of popular discussion and is emphasized by what the liberal press calls the new mistake of Cardinal Merry Del Val, who had before prevented the Choral society of Cologne from being received by the pope because the society visited the quirinal and sang before the Italian sovereign in spite of fact that every year hundreds of persons are received by King Victor Emmanuel and afterwards admitted to the presence of his holiness.

The Message today says:

"Within few days Cardinal Merry Del Val has shown discourtesies to the most beloved American citizen and to a gathering of the most beloved persons of Germany and indirectly to the king of Italy. As long as the young and audacious Spanish cardinal dominates the leonine city, the Italian liberals must be on their guard."

Rice Succumbs to Injuries.

Rugby, N. D., April 7.—After hovering at death's door for several days, O. C. Rice, who was injured in an election brawl in this city Monday night passed away last evening.

He has played with a number of the fast amateur teams in Minnesota, was catcher for the Rugby team three years ago and last year played with the Williston team and that of Brandon, Man.

Short funeral services will be held over Rice's body tomorrow afternoon when the remains accompanied by the two brothers of the deceased and his wife will be taken to their old home at Grant, Ky.

The preliminary hearing of Buoye and Meehan will probably be held on Monday.

FULL CONFESSION MADE

TELLS FEARFUL STORY OF WHOLESALE BUTCHERY

Disappearance of Many Sailors Has Long Puzzled Authorities of Puget Sound—Retribution Near

Aberdeen, Wash., April 5.—Retribution for the mysterious murder of a number of sailors, long a puzzle at the ports of Puget Sound, seems now close at hand.

Giving the alleged details of the killing of John Hoffman and Charles Hedberg, two of the missing seamen, John Klingenberg has made a sworn confession to Prosecuting Attorney Campbell.

Klingenberg says that he, under threat of death, at the hands of Wm. Gohl, killed Hedberg. The statement charges the slaying of Hoffman direct to Gohl who is a former agent of the Sailors' union and is under arrest at Montesano, waiting trial for a wholesale slaying that threatens to parallel the Gunness crimes in Indiana.

As in many previous cases, the two appeared mysteriously. Hedberg's body was found, but a search failed to reveal Hoffman's.

In December Klingenberg says he was persuaded to accompany Gohl and Hoffman in a launch to visit Hedberg. Gohl told Klingenberg, so the latter asserts that Hedberg had informed the authorities Gohl had shot a cow.

While on the way, the confession recites, Gohl fired four shots into Hoffman's back and threw the body overboard. The two survivors continued the trip to Hedberg's cabin, where they spent the night. The next morning Klingenberg at Gohl's command and under threat of death shot Hedberg, killing him instantly. The body was taken out in a launch and sunk in the bay.

LYNCHING WAS FEARED.

Prisoners are Removed to Towner Jail to Avoid Trouble.

Rugby, N. D., April 6.—O. C. Rice, who was reported dead yesterday, is still alive, although very low. A sinking spell at noon yesterday gave rise to the report that he had died.

Jack Buoye and Pat Meehan, charged with inflicting the injuries which will prove fatal to Rice were removed last evening to the jail at Towner because of the indignation their act has aroused in Rugby.

After a consultation of seven doctors held yesterday afternoon, Rice was placed on the operating table and the right side of his skull removed in order to take off a small blood clot on the brain. He was still unconscious at noon and is not expected to live more than a few hours.

The feud between the two men started over a horse race over a year ago and has been increasing ever since. Rice was with two friends on Monday night, who were called to one side by Meehan while Buoye engaged in the altercation with Rice, which ended in the fatal blow.

LONG LIST OF LAWYERS.

Has Been Retained in Fishery Question Now Before Hague.

Washington, April 6.—An array of counsel, greater in number and more illustrious in reputation than ever before assembled at the Hague to engage in a trial of a special case, has been retained to represent America and Great Britain in the determination of what is undoubtedly the most important issue ever presented to the great peace tribunal.

Technically this is a determination of the differences which have arisen between the two governments as to the true intent of the provisions of article 1 of the treaty of 1818, defining the fishing rights of Americans and Canadians, in their respective waters.

An issue of greatest importance is the determination of the right of a colony or province, such as Canada or New Foundland, by local legislation to deprive persons of the rights conferred by the treaty between the principals. On June 1 next the arbitration tribunal is to meet at the Hague to hear oral arguments.

Man Hurt at Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, April 6.—The county, city, and borough police are working desperately today to round up a quartette of men who last night entered the Victor Banking Co.'s building at the "bloody corner," McKees Rocks, shot and killed the general manager and the bookkeeper, wounded several citizens and then escaped, with less than $500 in cash. A state wide dragnet has been thrown out today and as a result five suspects are already locked in the Stowe township police station and more arrests are expected hourly.

Opens More Montana Land.

Grain House Goes Bump.

Chicago, April 6.—The suspension of the cash grain house of W. H. Merritt & Co., was announced on board of trade here today. Customers were notified to close out their trades.

W. H. Merritt & Co., have for many years been one of the most important firms in the cash grain trade, and their failure caused great surprise. The reasons for the suspension are closely analogous with those which on Monday forced another cash grain house, the Burns-Yantis Grain Co., to suspend, namely, a decline in corn prices recently. The liabilities are placed at $200,000 and assets $360,000.

Rugby, N. D., April 6.—O. C. Rice, who was injured in an after election celebration row here last night, died at noon today.

CALLS OFF RECEPTION.

Roosevelt Does Not Care to Arouse Religious Prejudice.

Rome, April 5.—Roosevelt's planned reception to the American colony has been called off as the result of the anti-vatican statement issued yesterday by Rev. Tipple of the American church in Rome.

The Tipple statement lifted the vatican episode out of the realm of the personal and gave it a world-wide significance saying: "Roosevelt has struck a blow for the twentieth century christianity." It was shown to Roosevelt who said "I had made no arrangements to speak at any church or clerical organizations in Rome. I have received a number of gentlemen of all religious faiths who have called at my rooms at the American embassy.

Under the circumstances I have requested the American embassador not to hold the reception which he had intended to hold Wednesday afternoon. As regards all efforts by whomsoever made to bring about and inflame religious animosities because of what has happened in connection with the vatican and myself, I can do no more than refer to my statement contained in my open letter to Dr. Lyman Abbott already published. All that I then said I desire to reiterate with my whole power."

Payne Discusses Tariff.

Washington, April 5.—The tariff law is every day confuting the many liars who attack it," declared Representative Sereno E. Payne of New York, one of the authors of the law, as he was leaving the White House today after a tariff conference with the president. Mr. Payne appeared annoyed to the point of being almost angry.

"From every standpoint it is the most successful bill this country has ever had, he declared. "It talks for itself every day in the up-building of American business at home and abroad. The Maximum and minimum provisions of the bill alone have opened the markets of the world to the goods of the United States."

Arrested for Criminal Libel.

Washington, April 5.—The arrest of John A. Penton, of Cleveland, O., secretary of the Merchant Marine league of the United States for criminal libel against Representative Steenerson, of Minnesota, followed his appearance as witness before the "ship subsidy lobby," inquiry. Penton accompanied the detectives to the district attorney's office and was released after depositing $500 cash bail. The arrest was made on a secret indictment returned March 30, based on an editorial organ of the Merchant Marine league.

Three Bishoprics to Fill.

Winona, Minn., April 5.—Rt. Rev. P. H. Heffron, appointed bishop of Winona, will not come here, until the eve of his installation. When that will be is uncertain. It has been decided that all six bishops of whom only three, Father Heffron, for Winona, Father O'Rielly for Fargo, and Father Lawler for St. Paul, have been appointed, are to be consecrated at the same time. The other, three, yet to be named, are those for Lead, S. D.; Bismarck, N. D., and Crookston, Minn.

Type of Moral Degenerate.

New York, April 5.—The tombs physician, Dr. T. A. McGuire, said today that Albert Wolter, who is charged with the murder of Ruth Wheeler, is a type of degenerate lacking in moral sense, but not immune from punishment for any crime he may have committed because he still has the power to distinguish the quality and nature of his acts.

Penton, of Cleveland, O., secretary of the Merchant Marine league of the United States, was the principal figure in today's proceedings before the house special committee which is inquiring into charges affecting members of the house in connection with ship subsidy legislation. The inquiry was at the instance to Representative Steenerson of Minnesota, whose resolution charged that the league, with a membership throughout the country had conspired improperly to create hostility against all persons opposed to ship subsidy legislation.

He turned the page round, and handed it to her. The writing was large and perfectly legible, but very different from the "commercial" hand of most American business men. Any one word, taken at random, might have seemed unformed, at first sight, but the appearance of the whole was oddly strong and symmetrical. Margaret read the clauses carefully. She herself had already signed a good many legal papers in connection with her engagements and her own small fortune, and the language was not so unfamiliar to her as it would have been to most women.

"Shall I sign first?" she asked, when she had finished. "My own name? Or my stage name?"

"Your own name, please," said Van Torp without hesitation. "The other's not binding in your profession, because you appear under it, and it's not business-style."

So she wrote 'Margaret Donne' at the foot of the page in her large and rather [illegible] hand, and passed the paper back to Van Torp, who signed it.

He waved the sheet slowly to and fro, to dry the ink.

"It's only a preliminary agreement," he said, "but it's binding as far as it goes and I'll attend to the rest. You'll have to give me a power of attorney for my lawyer in New York. By the by, if you decide to come, you can do that in Venice, where there's a real live consul. That's necessary. But for all matters of business herein set forth, we are now already 'The Mme. da Cordova and Rufus Van Torp Company, organized for the purpose of building an opera house in the city of New York and for giving public performances of musical works in the same, with a nominal capital hereafter to be agreed upon.' That's what we are now."

He folded the sheet, returned it to his inner pocket and held out his hand in a cheerful, business-like manner.

"Shall we shake hands on it?" he asked.

"By all means," Margaret answered readily, and their eyes met; but she drew back her hand again before taking his. "This is purely a matter of business between us," she said, "you understand that? It means nothing else?"

"Purely a matter of business," answered Rufus Van Torp, slowly and gravely.

CHAPTER XII.

On the morning after the transaction last described, Van Torp's attention was arrested by a sensational "scare-head" about a thief and a ruby worth $50,000. Some disaffected colleague in London had known, or cleverly guessed, where the stone was that had been stolen from Mr. Pinney's, and had informed the police; the nice-looking young fellow who spoke like an English gentleman had walked directly into the arms of the plain-clothes man waiting for him on the pier in New York, the stone had been found sewn up in his waistcoat, and his pleasant career of liberty had ended abruptly in a cell.

Mr. Van Torp whistled softly as he read the account a second time. Then he neatly cut the column out of the paper, folded it with great precision, smoothed it with care and placed it in his pocket-book next to a cheap little photograph of Mme. da Cordova as "Juliet," which he had bought in a music shop in New York the day after he had heard her for the first time, and had carried in his pocket ever since.

He took up the mutilated newspaper and looked up and down the columns, and among other information which he gathered in a few moments was the fact that Logotheti's yacht had "passed Cape Saint Vincent, going east, owner and party on board." The previous telegram had not escaped him, and if he had entertained any doubts as to the destination of the Erinna, they vanished now. She was certainly bound for the Mediterranean. He remembered having heard that many steam yachts coming from England put into Gibraltar for coal and fresh provisions, coal being cheaper there than in French and Italian ports, and he thought it very probable that the Erinna would do the same; he also made some deductions which need not be explained yet. The only one worth mentioning here was that Logotheti would be likely to hear in Gibraltar that the ruby had been found and was on its way back to England, and that as he would know that Margaret would be anxious about it, since he had already given it to her, he would hardly let the occasion of communicating with her go by. As for writing from Gibraltar to any place whatsoever in the hope that a letter will arrive in less than a week, it is sheer folly. Mr. Van Torp had never tried it, and supposed it possible, as it looks, but he was tolerably sure that Logotheti would telegraph first, and had perhaps done so already, for the news of his passing Cape Saint Vincent was already 24 hours old.

This was precisely what had happened. When Mr. Van Torp opened his door, he came upon Margaret and Mrs. Rushmore on the landing, on the point of going out for a walk, and a servant had just brought the prima donna a telegram which she was reading aloud, so that the American could not help hearing her.

"'Cruising till wanted,'" she read quickly. "'Ruby found. Address, yacht Erinna, Naples.'"

She heard Van Torp close his door, though she had not heard him open it, and turning round she found herself face to face with him. Her eyes were sparkling with anger.

"Very sorry," he said. "I couldn't help hearing."

"It's of no consequence, for I should have told you," Margaret answered briefly.

He argued well for himself from her tone and manner, but he chose to show that he would not force his company upon her just then, when she was in a visible rage, and instead of stopping to exchange more words he passed the two ladies hat in hand, and bowing rather low, after his manner, he went quietly downstairs.

Margaret watched him till he disappeared.

"I like that man," she said, as if to herself, but audibly. "I cannot help it."

Mrs. Rushmore was more than delighted, but had tact enough not to make any answer to a speech which had probably not been meant for her ears.

"Perhaps," she said, "you would rather not go out just yet, my dear."

Margaret was grateful for the suggestion, and they turned back into their rooms.

Meanwhile Van Torp had reached the door of the hotel, and found Lady Maud standing there with her parasol up, for the sun was streaming in.

"I was waiting for you," she said simply, as soon as he reached her side, and she stepped out into the street. "I thought you would come down, and I wanted to speak to you, for I did not get a chance last night. They were both watching me, probably because they thought I was ill, and I had to chatter like a magpie to keep up appearances."

"You did it very well," Van Torp said. "If I had not seen your face at the window when I got out of the automobile yesterday I shouldn't have guessed there was anything wrong."

"But there is—something very wrong—something I can hardly bear to think of, though I must, until I know the truth."

They turned into the first deserted street they came to.

"I dare say I can give a guess at what it is," Van Torp answered gravely. "I went to see him alone yesterday on purpose, before he started, and I must say, if it wasn't for the beard I'd feel pretty sure."

"He had a beard when I married him, and it was like that—just like that!"

Lady Maud's voice shook audibly, for she felt cold, even in the sunshine.

"I didn't know," Van Torp answered. "That alters the case. If we're not mistaken, what can I do to help you? Let's see. You only had that one look at him, through the window, is that so?"

"Yes. But the window was open, and it's not high above the ground, and my eyes are good. He took off his hat when he said good-by to you, and I saw his face as distinctly as I see yours. When you've been married to a man"—she laughed harshly—"you cannot be easily mistaken about him, when you're as near as that! That is the man I married. I'm intimately convinced of it, but I must be quite sure. Do you understand?"

"Of course. If he's really Leven, he's even a better actor than I used to think he was. If he's not, the resemblance is just about the most extraordinary thing! It's true I only saw Leven three or four times in my life, but I saw him to look at him then, and the last time I did, when he made the row in Hare court, he was doing most of the talking, so I remember his voice."

"There's only one difficulty," Lady Maud said. "Some one else may have been killed last June. It may even have been the pickpocket who had stolen his pocket-book. Such things have happened, or do in books! But this is certainly the man you met in New York and who sold you the stone you gave me, is he not?"

"Oh, certainly. And that was at the end of July, and Leven was killed late in June."

"Yes. That only leaves a month for him to have been to Asia—that's absurd."

"Utterly, totally, and entirely impossible," asseverated Mr. Van Torp. "One of two things. Either this man is your husband, and if he is, he's not the man who found the rubies in Asia. Or else, if he is that man, he's not Leven. I wish that heathen girl had been here yesterday! She could have told in a minute. She'd better have been here anyway than cutting around the Mediterranean with that fellow Logotheti!"

"Yes," Lady Maud answered gravely. "But about myself—if Leven is alive, what is my position—I mean—I don't really quite know where I am, do I?"

"Anybody but you would have thought of marrying again already," observed Mr. Van Torp, looking up sideways in her eyes, for she was taller than he. "Then you'd really be in a bad fix, wouldn't you? But as it is, I don't see that it makes much difference. The man's going under a false name, so he doesn't mean to claim you as his wife, nor to try to get a divorce again, as he did before. He's just going to be somebody else for his own good, and he'll get married that way, maybe. That's his business, not yours. I don't suppose you're going to get up in church and forbid the banns, are you?"

"I would, like a shot!" said Lady Maud. "So would you, I'm sure! Think of the other woman!"

"That's so," answered Van Torp without enthusiasm. "However, we've got to think about you and the present, and decide what we'll do. I suppose the best thing is for me to put him off with some excuse, so that you can come on the yacht."

"Please do nothing of the sort!" cried Lady Maud.

"But I want you to come," objected her friend.

"I mean to come. Do you think I'm afraid to meet him?"

Van Torp looked at her in some surprise, and not without admiration.

"There isn't anybody like you, anyway," he said quietly. "But there's going to be a circus on that ship if he's Leven," he added. "If he makes a fuss I'll read the riot act and lock him up."

"Oh, no," answered Lady Maud, who was used to Mr. Van Torp's familiar vocabulary, "why need there be any trouble? You've not told him I am coming, you say. Very well. If he sees me suddenly after he has been on board a little while, he'll certainly betray himself, and then I shall be sure. Leven is a man of the world—'was' or 'is'—God knows which! But if it is he, and he doesn't want to be recognized, he'll behave as if nothing had happened, after the first moment of surprise. At least I shall be certain. I must be positively sure whether Leven is alive or dead, for what I have got back in these last two months is my whole life. A mere recognition at first sight and at ten yards is not enough. It may be only a marvelous resemblance, for they say every one has a 'double' somewhere in the world."

"They used to say, too, that if you met your 'double' one of you would die," observed Van Torp. "Those things are all stuff and nonsense, of course. I was just thinking. Well," he continued, dwelling on his favorite monosyllable, "if you decide to come on the yacht, and if the man doesn't blow away, we shall know the truth in three or four days from now, and that's a comfort. And even if he turns out to be Leven, maybe we can manage something."

Lady Maud chose not to ask what her friend thought he could "manage;" for she had glanced at his face when he had spoken, and though it was half turned away from her, she saw his expression, and it would have scared a nervous person. She did not like him to be in that mood, and was sorry that she had brought him to it.

But Mr. Van Torp, who was a strong man, and had seen more than one affray in his ranching days, could not help thinking how uncommonly easy it would be to pick up Count Kralinsky and drop him overboard on a dark night next week, when the Lancashire Lass would be doing 22 knots, and there might be a little weather about to drown the splash.

CHAPTER XIII.

The millionaire did things handsomely. He offered to motor his party to Venice, and as Margaret declined, because motoring was bad for her voice, he telegraphed for a comfortable special carriage, and took his friends down by railroad, and they were all very luxuriously comfortable.

Kralinsky was not on board the yacht when they came alongside at sunset in two gondolas, following the steam-launch, which carried the load of luggage and the two maids.

Stamp led the way, and Mr. Van Torp took the three ladies to their cabins; first, Mrs. Rushmore, who was surprised and delighted by the rich and gay appearance of hers, for it was entirely decorated in pink and gold.

On the writing-table stood a tall, gilt vase full of immense pink roses, with stems nearer four feet long than three. Mrs. Rushmore admired them very much.

"How did you know that I love roses above all other flowers?" she asked. "My dear Mr. Van Torp, you are a wizard, I'm sure!"

Lady Maud and Margaret entered, and kept up a polite little chorus of admiration; but they both felt uneasy as to what they might find in their respective cabins, for Margaret hated pink, and Lady Maud detested gilding, and neither of them was especially fond of roses. They left Mrs. Rushmore very happy in her quarters and went on. Lady Maud's turn came next, and she began to understand, when she saw a quantity of sweet wood violets on her table, just loosened, in an old Murano glass beaker.

"Thank you," she said, bending to smell them. "How kind of you!"

There was not a trace of gilding or pink silk. The cabin was paneled and fitted in a rare natural wood of a creamy-white tint.

"Beg pardon, my lady," said Stemp. "This and Miss Donne's cabin communicate by this door, and the door aft goes to the dressing-room. Each cabin has one quite independent, and this bell rings the pantry, my lady, and this one rings Miss Donne's maid's cabin, as I understand that your ladyship has not brought her own maid with her."

"Very nice," said Lady Maud, smelling the violets again.

Stemp threw open the door of communication to the cabin he had prepared for the prima donna. The two cabins occupied the whole beam of the vessel, excepting the six-foot gangway on each side, and as she was one of the largest yachts afloat at the time, there was no lack of room.

"Carnations, at this time of year!" cried Margaret, seeing half an armful of her favorite dark red ones, in a silver wine-cooler before the mirror. "You really seem to know everything! Thank you so much!"

She buried her handsome face in the splendid flowers and drew in a deep, warm breath, full of their sensuous perfume, the spicy scent of a laden clove-tree under a tropical sun.

"Thank you again!" she said enthusiastically. "Thank you for everything, the delightful journey, and this lovely room, and the carnations!"

She stood up suddenly to her height, in sheer pleasure, and held out her hand to him. He pressed it quietly, and smiled.

"Do as you would be done by," he said. "That's the company's rule."

She laughed at the allusion to their agreement, of which Lady Maud knew nothing, for they had determined to keep it secret for the present.

Mr. Van Torp had not found an opportunity of speaking to Lady Maud alone, but he wished her to know when Kralinsky might be expected.

"Stemp," he said, before leaving the cabin, "have you heard from the count?"

"Yes, sir. He got here this morning from Vienna in his motor, sir, and sent his things with his man, and his compliments to you and the ladies, and he will come on board in time for dinner. That was all, I think, sir."

Lady Maud heard, and made a scarcely perceptible movement of the head by way of thanks to her friend, while listening to Margaret's enthusiastic praise of everything she saw. Mr. Van Torp and his man departed, just as Potts appeared, accompanied by a very neat-looking English stewardess in a smart white cap. Lady Maud was unusually silent, but she smiled pleasantly at what Margaret said, and the latter made up her mind to drown her anger against Logotheti, and at the same time be avenged on him, in an orgy of luxurious comfort, sea-air, and sunshine. The capacity of a perfectly healthy and successful singer for enjoying everything, from a halfpenny bun and a drive in a hansom to a millionaire's yacht and the most expensive fat of the land, or sea, has never been measured. And if they do have terrible fits of temper now and then, who shall blame them? They are always sorry for it, because it is bad for the voice.

Mr. Van Torp reached his quarters, and prepared to scrub and dress comfortably after a week at Bayreuth and a railroad journey.

Lady Maud did not begin to dress at once, as there was plenty of time before dinner; she left the stewardess to unpack her things, and came out upon the six-foot gangway outside her cabin door to breathe the air, for it was warm. The city lay half a mile away in the afterglow of the sunset.

But she felt none of that healthy pleasure which a lovely sight naturally gave her. She was at a crisis of her life, and the exquisite evening scene was the battlefield of a coming struggle, with herself, or with another, she hardly knew. In half an hour, or in an hour, at most, she was to sit at table with a man she fully believed to be the husband for whom she had been wearing mourning, out of mere decency, but with the profound inward satisfaction of being free.

Spider Colonies.

Our native spiders are notable for their extreme unsociability. Of those which are spinners each one constructs its web apart from those of its kind. And those which hunt pursue their prey alone, says the London Globe.

In other countries, however, there are spiders which live in communities, and one such, a native of Mexico, is described by M. L. Diguet. It is known as the mosquero and makes a large nest in oaks and other trees. Here the spiders live gregariously and along with them in the nest is found a minute beetle and another species of spider. The beetle is said to act as scavenger. Parts of the nest of the mosquero are hung up in the houses during the wet season to get rid of the flies.

Mrs. Piper to the Rescue

And the Little Woman's Money Was Saved and the Highwayman Summarily Disposed Of.

The highwayman began to relieve the Jew peddler of his pocketbook and valuables. The drummer was next, and he disgorged without a murmur. Then came the little woman. She was holding her baby with one arm, while with the other she held out her little handbag to the robber.

"Oh, my!" she said. "I've only got $28 and it's all I have in the world. I don't know what me and the baby will do if you take it! I'm a stranger here."

"You'll have to write back to your friends for more," said the highwayman as he grabbed the handbag.

"I haven't anyone to write to," she replied, as he began taking out the money. "I really don't know what I will do."

"Yo' might leave her part of it," suggested Mrs. Piper, the 300-pound cook and new-found friend of the little woman. "Don't take all th' poor woman has, and her with that little baby."

"We never make change," replied the highwayman, leering as he opened the bag.

"Ain't yo' goin' t' leave her anything?" asked Mrs. Piper in a threatening tone. Her little satchel, unseen by the highwayman, dropped to the ground, and her hands were free.

"Jist keep quiet, madam, please, if yo' don't want any trouble," replied the robber. "I'm running this, and I don't want to kill anyone."

"Trouble!" exclaimed the fat Mrs. Piper, lunging toward him, and before he knew it she had wrested the six-shooter from his hand and "lammed" him over the head with it. "Trouble!" she repeated. "It'll be wors'n trouble fur you if yo' don't give that there woman her money back, every cent of it. Hear?" and she raised the six-shooter again as if to strike. "Yo' lazy lout, takin' a poor little woman's money—all she has—her an' that little baby. Put that here money back in that there handbag, 'n' put it back durned quick."

The highwayman had put his loot in a grain sack. He stopped and began putting the little woman's money back into her handbag. Then he stopped and said he had put it all back.

"Now," said Mrs. Piper, taking him by the back of his shirt collar and turning his face toward the timber, "you skin out o' here, and skin durned hard." And she kicked the seat of his jumpers a couple of times into the underbrush.—"Mrs. Piper's Limit," by George McCullough, in McClure's.

Farmers should eat more oatmeal.

Although the farmer of today is able to buy almost anything he wants to wear or eat he isn't paying enough attention to food values when it comes to his own table.

He feeds his stock carefully, avoids over-feeding and selects the stock food that he believes will give the best returns in strength and general efficiency.

If he has been watching the extensive researches and experiments on the question of the best human food for muscle and brain he will heed the advice from all sides to "eat more Quaker Oats."

IN HOSPITAL FOR NINE MONTHS.

Awful Tale of Suffering From Kidney Trouble.

Alfred J. O'Brien, Second St., Sterling, Colo., says: "I was in the Baltimore Marine Hospital for nine months. I had a dull pain in the small of my back that completely wore me out. The urine was in a terrible state, and some days I would pass half a gallon of blood. I left the hospital because they wanted to operate on me. I went to St. Joseph's Hospital at Omaha and put in three months there without any gain. I was pretty well discouraged when I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I did so and by the time I had taken one box, the pain in the back left me. I kept right on and a perfect cure was the result."

ROSY COLOR

Produced by Postum.

"When a person rises from each meal with a ringing in the ears and a general sense of nervousness, it is a common habit to charge it to a deranged stomach.

"I found it was caused from drinking coffee, which I never suspected for a long time, but found by leaving off coffee that the disagreeable feelings went away.

"I was brought to think of the subject by getting some Postum and this brought me out of trouble.

"It is a most appetizing and invigorating beverage and has been of such great benefit to me that I naturally speak of it from time to time as opportunity offers.

"A lady friend complained to me that she had tried Postum, but it did not taste good. In reply to my question she said she guessed she boiled it about ten minutes. I advised her to follow directions and know that she boiled it fifteen or twenty minutes, and she would have something worth talking about. A short time ago I heard one of her children say that they were drinking Postum now-a-days, so I judge she succeeded in making it good, which is by no means a difficult task.

"The son of one of my friends was formerly a pale lad, but since he has been drinking Postum, has a fine color. There is plenty of evidence that Postum actually does 'make red blood,' as the famous trade-mark says."

The church has the right to make its own rules and Teddy has the right to refuse to call at the Vatican if these rules do not suit him.

John Lind, in a recent interview, says: "In my opinion Cannonism will be as much alive as ever until the leader of the party takes the position that the highest interests of the nation are to be considered and observed. If this carries out platform pledges, well and good, so much the better for the party. Cannonism may be scorched a little by what occurred in the House, but, unfortunately, it is not killed. It is up to the president to repudiate and eliminate it from our national politics. S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is a species of blood poverty known as anaemia. It is a condition in which the circulation is so weak and impure that it is unable to supply the system with sufficient nourishment and strength to preserve ordinary health.

The medical profession is divided in opinion as to the manner in which malarial poison gets into the blood. Some take the position that it is an atmospheric poison, the specific germs of which are breathed into the lungs and thus transmitted to the circulation. Others advance the opinion that persons become inoculated with the poison through the bites of mosquitos. All however agree that MALARIA is a blood affection, and any treatment to successfully overcome it must not only purify this vital fluid, but at the same time add the necessary qualities of richness and strength to the circulation.

The malarial poison destroys large numbers of the rich, red corpuscles of the circulation, and the peculiar paleness of anaemic persons is due to this fact. In the first stages of Malaria there is a bilious condition of the system, constant bodily weakness, poor appetite, and a "no account," tired feeling. S.S.S. searches out and destroys every particle of malarial infection and builds the blood up to a healthy, nourishing condition. Then the system receives its required nutriment, the bright red corpuscles begin to multiply in the circulation, sallow complexions grow ruddy and flushed with health, the liver and digestion are righted, the appetite improved, and the system vitalized and refreshed in every way. S.S.S. is a safe and pleasant remedy as well as an efficient one. If you have Malaria we will be glad to have you write us describing the case. We will send free our book on the blood and at the same time our physicians will give you some medical advice that will be of great service to you in curing yourself with S. S. S. No charge for the book or advice.

A PHYSICAL WRECK.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi River, and became so impregnated with malaria that for a year afterwards I was a physical wreck. I took a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures and malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S.S.S., which I did about a year ago. The result was that after taking several bottles of the large size I was as well and strong as I ever was, and have never had a chill since. I expect to take S.S.S. every year as a preventive, and would advise everybody else to follow my example.

STAND-PAT OR INSURGENT?

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

tion, and we can't have an organization unless we have the stuff to make one out of. Where are our campaign funds to come from unless we have the administration back of us and the congressional campaign strong box to draw on? We're not in politics for our health. We've got to be regular and that's all there is to it. It's up to the state convention to endorse the national administration and show the president that our heart is in the right place.

The Wild-eyed.

That's the way they talk, and whatever Hugh Halbert and the other wild-eyed may say, the Old Guard are simply wild to see Clapp slopping over the way he does. The governor is especially chagrined that Clapp, after his nomination had been assured through his friends acting with Grimshaw and his bunch, should take it into his head to break out in a new place. For when Governor Eberhart was down at Washington he fixed it all up with the president to have his oraganiazlion line up with the Tawney crowd and the regulars. There had been some symptoms of hysterics, to be sure, he told the president; but these would soon subside and when it came to the fall elections he would see to it that the Republicans were in line alright, alright.

The Governor's Program.

Up to within a few days the governor felt pretty sure that by pursuing his usual diplomatic methods he would be able to make good. The Beveridge outburst, however, and Clapp lining himself up with Beveridge and against Taft, puts altogether another face on the matter. The convention is sure to nominate Clapp and to praise him for the independent stand he has taken against the unpopular national policies. That is the very first thing it has to do. It is the opening business laid out for the delegates to attend to. Having done this the governor has the unpleasant task laid out for him to compel the convention to stultify itself by, after having praised Clapp for the opposition he set up to the policies of the president, praising the president for having outlined those policies and for using the federal patronage to secure their embodiment in the national statutes.

Nelson For Chairman.

The announcement is made that the governor's slatemakers have selected Senator Nelson to be the permanent chairman of the convention. This plan is understood to have originated with Private Secretary Wheelock and to be intended to indicate to the president the attitude of Minnesota Republicans in the matter of the inquiry now being made by the congressional committee of which Senator Nelson is chairman. The president honored Glavis; he removed Pinchot. He gave Ballinger to understand that he regarded him as a conservator from away back. Senator Nelson has divided his time pretty fairly since the investigation began between browbeating Galvis and quarreling with the attorney employed by Mr. Pinchot. It was Secretary Wheelock's view that under these circumstances the selection now of Senator Nelson to the permanent chairman of the Republican convention would be regarded by the president as the proper caper.

Facing Both Ways.

There are among the Republican candidates—even among those who are trying to make it appear that they are identified with the administration slate a good deal of coquetting going on with the county option people. Indeed it is said that some of the candidates for lieutenat governor are trying pretty hard to carry water on both shoulders. It is noted that some of them who are most anxious to please the temperance folks maintain intimate relations with quite a different crowd.

Temperance Champion Gone.

Incidently it may be said that the advocates of county option sustained a very serious loss when Joel Heatwole died. Mr. Heatwole was known to be on confidential terms with the county option leaders and arrangements were made months ago to call him in council in arranging their plan of campaign. It is pretty certain that, apart from what he had been doing through his paper, Mr. Heatwole could bring more effective strength to the cause through his purely political connections than any man in the state. Public sentiment is all well enough in its way, but delegates are what the county option cause needs. If Mr. Heatwole had lived he would not have exhibited his usual capacity if he had not got some from unexpected quarters.

A Man Who Will be Missed.

And it won't be only the temperance people who will miss him. There will be some danger of a lot of people forgetting that Northfield itself is on the map now that he has gone. In his time there has been little else in Rice county even to make it especially conspicuous politically. Joel had a way of keeping things in the limelight he wanted people to talk about, and the independent and reform press of the state owes perhaps more than it is willing to acknowledge of his present outspoken independence and courage to his initiative.

Disreputable Methods.

Talking about Mr. Heatwole, they had a sample down in this county the other day of about the meanest and dirtiest politics the state has known for some time. They had a city election down in Faribault; a fellow by the name of Smith was running for mayor. There has always been more or less jealousy of Heatwole in that town which, being the county seat, concludes it should be the county's political center. Because Heatwole took that center up in one corner where he lives, he hasn't been as popular in Faribault as otherwise he might be. Smith got the notion in his head that he might make use of this prejudice to his own advantage. So in a campaign sheet he was getting out, dated the day of Mr. Heatwole's death and circulated while he lay in his coffin this paragraph appeared:

"Is it possible that the stuffed prophet of Northfield and the foxy Charley (Congressman Davis) think it dangerous to the interests to elect George L. Smith for a fourth term?"

In this campaign sheet "published and edited by George L. Smith" is admitted under the editorial head, a statement is further referred to as having appeared "in Charles R. Davis' paper, which is run under the direction of Joel P. Heatwole of Northfield." The fact is, I am assured, that Mr. Heatwole has had no connection whatever with a Faribault paper for years, and that since January 11th he not only did not direct such a paper, but was incapacitated by illness from even reading his own. To political scavingers like Smith even the grave is not sacred.

"They are neither man nor woman:
They are neither beast nor human:
They are ghouls."

Lee Still Talking.

William E. Lee is back from a trip to the south and is talking politics again. He isn't at all a Republican of the mealy-mouthed harmony brand. He thinks the party ought to be doing something. In an interview he took pains to give out as soon as he came back he said among other things:

"But county option is only one of the problems the Republican party will have to face. The brewers and other big interests and politicians have had altogether too much to say about platforms and nominations and the people will have to be considered. The party will have to do something or it might as well go out of business. There is not only the liquor problem, but the platform will have to say something on such questions as ship subsidy, the central bank and other national questions. The party cannot expect its congressmen to be standing for the people unless there is some such expression of popular will.

"And the platform will have to say something about the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. That question cannot be dodged, as has been done in some states. The people will not be satisfied with a lot of platitudes. Neither can the party expect to win if it allows a few big brewers to name the candidate for governor just because they chip in a little for the campaign fund. It cannot allow the interests to run the party and lead it to defeat, as has been done in the last three campaigns.

"Whether I will be a candidate or not is of small importance in comparison with some of these questions. There are some things the people are demanding shall be done, and it is a question whether the Republican party shall do it or let some other party do it."

ONE OF ADAM'S TROUBLES

Incident in the Garden of Eden That Must Be Taken for What It Is Worth.

Rev. Dr. Charles Townsend of Orange was one of the speakers at the Park Presbyterian Church Men's club banquet last week, and told this story of one of the troubles of the original ancestor:

"Adam had eaten the elaborate repast furnished by his helpmeet with every indication that he relished each morsel. He complimented her upon the dainty manner in which the bluepoints were served, the flavor of the puree of pea, the seasoning of the fish and entree, and finally reached a delicious salad. Adam paused, and with a worried look on his face he demanded of Eve where she found the ingredients. She enumerated all except the lettuce.

"'Where did you get those leaves?' he demanded.

"'Why, they were lying on a bush in the back yard,' she replied sweetly.

"'Well, those were my best Sunday trousers,' sobbed Adam, adding, 'Ah, woe is man,' which was corrupted into 'woman,' the term by which we know Eve's daughters."—Newark Star.

He said it was eczema and from that time we doctored six months with three of the best doctors in Atchison but he only got worse. His face, head and hands were a solid sore. There was no end to the suffering for him. We had to tie his little hands to keep him from scratching. He never knew what it was to sleep well from the time he took the disease until he was cured. He kept us awake all hours of the night and his health wasn't what you would call good. We tried everything but the right thing.

"Finally I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies and I am pleased to say we did not use all of them until he was cured. COMET IS HARMLESS

When It Hits Will Make Pretty Show, But Do No Damage.

Peculiar Electrical Conditions May Be Looked For About the Middle of May—19th of May Date of Passage.

Washington. — Astronomers have fixed the 19th of May as the day of the passage of the earth through the tail of Halley's comet, at which time the celestial visitor will be at its most brilliant period on its perihelion passage through the solar system.

Comets come and go, and while in the solar system assume various shapes of circles, knots, twists and streaky tails and then leave those on the earth forever in doubt as whence they come and whither they go—a conclusion of the physicist and astronomer.

But this spring when the comet comes it will afford the rare chance, as the earth passes through its tail, of learning much in regard to comets and their accompanying phenomena. This will include distinctive markings as bright patches, streaks, straight and twisted, many and various shapes of tails and any other phenomena as may present itself to the observer.

In the passage of the earth through the tail of Halley's comet there will be a polarization of its light, light fluctuations, earth currents, which mean a marked change in the electrical condition of the atmosphere—auroreal displays may be expected for several days at the intersection of the earth with the material of the comet.

The color of the sun will be temporarily modified in the earth's passage through the tail. Twilight panorama, luminous clouds, dust particles in the air and the apparent brilliancy of zodiacal light may be greater during the passage through even so rare a substance as the tail of a comet. The auroral line will perhaps show up to be the most interesting and the most spectacular phenomena in the passage of the earth through the comet's tail.

Dr. Humphreys of the Mount Weather observatory, speaking of this phenomena, says: "Evidently the source of this line is not definitely known, but conceivably it may be rendered more brilliant by the passage of the earth through the tail of a comet, and therefore it would be well for some favorably situated observer carefully to measure its brilliancy on several consecutive nights, so selected as systematically to overlap the calculated date of our supposed passage through the tail of Halley's comet."

The late Prof. S. P. Langley said: "The encounter of the earth with a comet's tail would be like the encounter with a shadow, and the chances of a collision with the nucleus is remote indeed."

Some time about the middle of May the earth will pass through the tail of Halley's comet.

The real gist of the stunt will be known only by the mathematical astronomer, and if there should be a hitch in the performance they would hardly have the opportunity to explain the slip-up in the laws of gravitation.

Far away in the depths of space, so remote from our planetary system, lies the future comet. Across the abyss which intervenes between the comet and the sun the law of gravitation extends its sway. After the lapse of centuries, or thousands of years, the comet is seen to be rapidly approaching—it whirls around the sun, and then recedes further and further, perhaps never again to return to our system.

BOGOTA HAS STREET RAILWAY RIOTS

STREET SCENE IN BOGOTA

MINISTER ELLIOTT NORTHCOTT

BOGOTA, COLOMBIA. — Riotous mobs have succeeded in stopping the operations of the Bogota City Railway Company, and now the Colombian employes of the company, terrorized by the crowds, have refused to make further efforts to move the cars. The American legation, which was stoned some days ago, is protected by the local authorities and Minister Northcott is doing all in his power to bring the troubles to an end. The Bogota City Railway Company is composed of Americans who received a concession from former President Reyes. The granting of the concession proved very unpopular, and the rioting, directed against the Americans followed.

MENACE TO PLAGUE

Ground Squirrel and Common Rat Aid Bubonic Plague.

Federal Experts Trace Death of Boy and Alarm Health Department Chief in Chicago—Asks Aid of Government.

Chicago.—Extinction of the ground squirrel as well as of the rat may be necessary if Chicago is to avoid the bubonic plague, according to Dr. W. A. Evans, head of the city health department.

Dr. Evans has received the health bulletin of the federal government, which contains an alarming report on the spread of bubonic plague by fleas that infest these animals. He renewed his advice for the killing of every rat in the city.

Up to August 13, 1909, government inspectors found 178 squirrels in Contra Costa county, California, infected with the plague. Orders were given afterward to poison every squirrel in that county. The government will send out free poison for this purpose.

Two cases that caused Dr. Evans to renew his warning for the extinction of rats in Chicago and that may place the squirrel in the same category are as follows:

"July 15, 1908, a boy who lived on a ranch in the northern part of Contra Costa county, died of the plague. Later in the same month a young woman of Pinole canyon succumbed.

"Infected rats were found on the ranch adjoining that on which the boy lived, according to the government report, and an infected squirrel was found near the house where he had lived. The boy had been shooting squirrels several days before he died and thrust his arm down into a squirrel burrow to get one of the animals he had shot. His arm was bitten by fleas, according to the government physicians, and the disease communicated in that way.

"There is always a constant menace of the bubonic plague anywhere in the United States," said Dr. Evans, "now that it has got a hold in California. If it should ever be introduced into Chicago the conditions would be alarming, owing to the prevalence of rats and the difficulties of exterminating them.

"The building regulations of most places in California call for rat-proof cellars, but here it is too late to take such precautions. We would also have to provide for rat-proof garbage cans and keep the rats away from all food in the alleys and cellars.

"The government officials recognize the danger of the spread of the plague and are taking every means to prevent it. Prevention is better than cure, and Chicago must assist in the work.

"If the squirrel is in the same class as the rat he must also be exterminated."

Following Dr. Evans' first warning to exterminate rats, many large business houses in Chicago called in rat catchers. It is estimated that since the crusade against rodents was started a year ago nearly 200,000 rats have been killed in the city.

Injurious Concrete Floors.

Opponents of the use of concrete for floors in factories contend that the stonelike surface is injurious to the feet and backs of workmen, and that the dust ground from the concrete finds its way into and injures the machine bearings.

Record in Picture Taking

Remarkable Achievement of Mr. F. Dundas Todd, a Victoria (B. C.) Photographer.

Victoria, B. C.—What is stated to be the longest distance photograph ever produced was recently taken from Victoria, the subject matter being Mount Baker, distant from here 75 miles. The photographer, F. Dundas Todd, spent 18 months before he finally was successful in taking his subject, walking each morning during that time to the top of Reservoir hill. On a clear, calm morning, when the towering summit of the Cascades was clearly defined against the sky-line, 12 photographs were taken from Shotholt's hill, Mr. Todd having decided upon this point after many futile visits to Reservoir hill.

The record longest distance photograph previously taken was one in Switzerland, over a distance of 65 miles. The present picture covers 75 miles, and whereas the former was taken over land the latter possesses the drawback of having had to shoot across 40 miles of water, which produces a mirage effect in photos. In Mr. Todd's photograph eight or nine planes of different values are clearly defined. First is seen the land below Shotholt's hill, then a sheet of water broken by Discovery and Chatham islands; beyond these more water, and then the end of San Juan island, on which a house is distinctly visible. Further away still a portion of Lopez island is discernible, then come the foothills of the Cascades, while crowning all, standing out in clear and distinct relief in all its snowclad majesty, is Mount Baker.

The picture was taken at midday during two hours of absolute calm. The camera was an old one, invented some twenty years ago. The focal lens was 68 inches in length. Special plates were used. The ray filter with which the photograph was taken was designed by Prof. Wallace of Yerkes Observatory, who presented it to Mr. Todd.

Mr. Todd has won several medals for photographs he has taken in Scotland, England and the United States.

Bear an Effective Curfew

Timid Remain at Home at Night While Armed Expedition Search for Animal.

Clayton, N. J.—Reports of the presence of a large black bear in Jericho swamp, near here, have acted like a curfew on the timid, who will keep under shelter after dark until Bruin is captured, which will be soon, say the hunters, who, 50 strong, will explore the vast swamp in hope of apprehending his bearship.

The bear was discovered the other night by Louis G. Fisher, who, with Thomas A. Downs, Thomas Stalford, David Moore, Corbett Fisler and Ashley Ashbridge, was on a fox hunt. It was after midnight before the hounds took a trail, and Fisler rushed ahead of his comrades into the swamp, holding a lantern aloft to show the way. A big black object, which the hunters declare was a bear, with a powerful paw knocked the lantern from Fisler's hand and extinguished the light just as 18 hounds arrived and pandemonium reigned.

The hunters rescued Fisler and dragged him to a place of safety, while the bear and the hounds rush into the deep swamp. The chase was kept up until daybreak, when the tired hunters returned to town with several dogs missing.

The letter, which was the first instance of restitution for evaded car fares on the local street railway company, read:

"Maryville, Tenn.—Dear Sir: Some time ago, while a resident of your city I evaded several fares on the street car. Inclosed please find 40 stamps refund.

General Rules for Vegetables.

Select vegetables carefully, choosing each in the season when it is at its best.

In looking over vegetables, much may be saved if thought is taken. The inside of a cabbage is much more tender, so save the inner portion for the salad, using the other part for cooking as a vegetable.

Potatoes should be looked over, the poorer ones used when the potatoes are to be mashed or cut in cubes. The potatoes for baking should be chosen which are smooth and long.

All vegetables should be put into boiling water, and salt may be added to the root vegetables.

If the water is very hard, a little soda will soften it.

Left-over vegetables may be used as a foundation for creamed soups by putting them through a sieve, adding milk, cream or butter and seasonings with a binding of flour.

The water in which strong flavored vegetables are cooked should be changed several times. The odor of cabbage and onions is less disagreeable if the vegetables are cooked in an uncovered kettle.

Color of peas or any green vegetable is best retained by boiling in an uncovered kettle.

Delmonico Potatoes.

Cut boiled potatoes into cubes. Put a layer of the potatoes into a buttered baking dish, cover with a white sauce in which three tablespoonfuls of chopped cheese is melted, repeat with the potato, then cover with buttered crumbs and grated cheese. Bake until thoroughly heated.

Minced Liver.

Cook the liver of chickens or calf in simmering water for 40 minutes; remove all stringy portions and chop fine. Moisten with a little of the water in which it was cooked, add butter, salt and onion juice, season with pepper and serve with baked potatoes.

"THE common problem, yours, mine, everyone's
Is—not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be; but finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means—a very different thing."
—Robert Browning.

Butter and Other Fats.

We need have no quarrel with good butter, provided we have the wherewithal to pay for it; but when a workingman who earns nine or ten dollars a week must pay rent, buy fuel and food for his family of five or six, clothe them and lay by something for the doctor's bill or a rainy day, the outgo is far in excess of the income.

Much has been said against the manufactured fats, such as butterine, oleomargarine and like fats; but when they are produced under clean conditions as we are assured they are, why will not people allow the poor laborer his butter fat in this form when he cannot afford to pay 35 and 40 cents a pound for butter.

These fats are clean and wholesome, and if one can overcome the distaste for the slight flavor, just as good, as any other form of clean fat, even butter.

In cooking they may be used without the slightest of the characteristic flavors being noticed. For a salad dressing requiring a large proportion of butter, the butterine may be used with excellent advantage.

As these fats are about one-half the price of butter, it is quite an item for the poor man who has to count and turn over every penny before spending it.

Many farmers are buying oleo, or butterine for their families, and selling cream and butter at a high price. That of course, is a saving, and if it is made up to the family in other ways perfectly just, if they are satisfied.

There is another class of farmers who are so sure that the manufactured butters are going to ruin the dairy business that they never allow an occasion to slip to strike at the product. With butter at a reasonable price there would be no question which the workingman would choose, for of all fats, butter is one of the most nutritious and easy of digestion.

As It Looked to Her.

To my little daughter of three the dawning of each new day was a constant marvel and surprise. Going to an east window, she would look out quickly and exclaim: "Mamma, the sky's open again!" NOT LOOKING FOR TROUBLE

Young Man Unnecessarily Alarmed Over Question Put to Him by Old Gentleman.

A quiet, bashful sort of a young fellow was making a call on a Capitol hill girl one evening not so very long ago, when her father came into the parlor with his watch in his hand. It was about half past nine o'clock. At the moment the young man was standing on a chair, straightening a picture over the piano. The girl had asked him to fix it. As he turned, the old gentleman, a gruff, stout fellow, said:

"Young man, do you know what time it is?"

The bashful youth got off the chair nervously. "Yes, sir," he replied. "I was just going."

He went into the hall without any delay and took his hat and coat. The girl's father followed him. As the caller reached for the doorknob the old gentleman again asked him if he knew what time it was.

"Yes, sir," was the youth's reply. "Good-night!" And he left without waiting to put his coat on.

After the door had closed the old gentleman turned to the girl.

"What's the matter with that fellow?" he asked. "My watch ran down this afternoon and I wanted him to tell me the time so that I could set it."—Denver Post.

"He says his name is Murphy," repeated the policeman on the bridge.

"He says he was born in Italy," again responded the bridge policeman.

"Umph! The Murphys are numerous, but I didn't think they had spread to Italy," said the judge as he made the fine $1 and asked the man to spell his name.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Good Work In Denmark.

Under legislation enacted in 1905 the Danish government pays three-fourths of the expenses of all poor persons who desire to be treated in tuberculosis sanatoria. When the hospitals under construction are completed Denmark will have one bed in tuberculosis hospitals or sanatoria for every 1,200 inhabitants, a fact which will mean that the length of treatment can be considerably extended. In the United States there is one bed for every 4,500 inhabitants.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. G. T. Roberts of Resaca, Ga., R F D. No. 1, Box 43, writes:—"I have used your Liniment on a horse for sweeney and effected a thorough cure. I also removed a spavin on a mule. This spavin was as large as a guinea egg. In my estimation the best remedy for lameness and soreness is

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. H. M. Gibbs, of Lawrence, Kans., R F D. No. 3, writes:—"Your Liniment is the best that I have ever used. Farm School Letter

Interesting Information on Minnesota Agriculture by Our Special Correspondent.

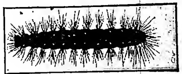
A Dangerous Pest.

A new and dangerous pest threatens Minnesota. It comes in an importation of nursery stock from France and while it is believed by the Entomologist at the Minnesota Experiment Station that all that have come into the state have been taken care of, it is of course possible that some may have escaped, and the purpose of this warning is to put purchasers of imported nursery stock on their guard and induce them to co-operate with the Entomologist in thoroughly preventing its introduction into Minnesota. The Brown Tail moth is referred to, and while in Europe, in its native lair, it has an insect enemy that holds it in check, it comes to this country as larvae and has no known enemy. It therefore becomes necessary to give personal attention to the prevention of its coming here. The state Entomologist and the federal authorities at Washington are co-operating in this state to prevent both the Brown Tail and the Gypsy moth from getting a home among the shrubbery and trees of the state. Every importation of nursery stock is reported from the steamer landing to the department in Washington, and is reported from there to the Minnesota station.

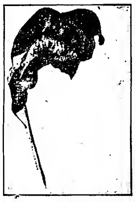
As soon as the consignment is received at the custom house in this state the collector reports its arrival to the Entomological department at University Farm, when immediately an examination is made by competent entomologists. It was in this way that Prof. A. G. Ruggles, acting Entomologist for the state, discovered a nest of the Brown Tail moth on the end of a twig a few days ago. This nest consists of a semi-roll of leaves, lined with silk, in which are hundreds of the larvae, now in the laboratory of the Entomologist at University Farm, closely guarded in a bottle from which there is no escape. These larvae are small caterpillars within the mass of leaves and silken lining. They are very active in the bottle and show rapid development.

The Brown Tail moth is one of the most destructive pests, and together with the Gypsy moth, is giving serious trouble in Massachusetts and other New England states, so much so that already Massachusetts has spent more than a million and a half of dollars in their extermination, while the general government has established a station for the breeding of their insect enemies at an expense of several thousand dollars.

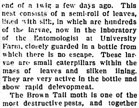
The Brown Tail is especially destructive of shrubbery, plum, apple, cherry, pear, elm, oak and maple trees, both in forests and orchards, and if once introduced into Minnesota will give our people serious trouble. The Brown Tail is also very dangerous to human health since the hairs which drop from its body are very irritating to human skin and when inhaled create dangerous conditions in the human throat, often requiring a migration to other localities for relief. The Brown Tail lays its eggs on leaves of shrubbery and trees, in July or August, soon hatching into caterpillars of dark brown color and quite easily recognized by the naked eye, characterized by two bright spots to be found on the back near the posterior end. They are very small during the winter. In the fall they draw several leaves together for a nest, lining it with silk. Hibernating as caterpillars, they develop rapidly to the full size of about an inch and a half early in summer. The moth is nearly a pure white excepting in the male when there are a few black spots on the wings.



Caterpillar of Brown Tail Moth.
They are of a dull orange color, with two bright red spots on the middle line at the lower end of the back. When from half to full grown there is a conspicuous row of white spots of hair on each side of the center of the back.



Winter Nest of Brown Tail Moth.
Small caterpillars remain in this silken web on the tips of twigs during the winter, and in the spring they come out and attack the foliage.



Male Brown Tail Moth.
These moths have a thick tuft of brownish hairs at the tip of the abdomen. They are swift and strong flyers and fly at night, and are often attracted to lights. The female is a pure, snow white.

The Gypsy is probably the most destructive species, and comes in eggs generally in clusters on the bark of trees and shrubbery, and are of a light yellowish color. When fully developed the caterpillar is of a dark color, with a double row of five blue spots on back anteriorly and six pairs of red spots posteriorly. The female moth is of whitish color with wings imperfectly streaked with black and with about two inches spread of wings.

Although the female moth has wings she never flies. The Division of Extension warns all purchasers of imported nursery stock to carefully examine it for any of the conditions named and asks that report be immediately made of the finding of eggs or webs, each respectively, to the Division of Entomology, University Farm, St. Paul, sending them so packed that neither insect nor eggs can be injured in transit nor escape. Immediate attention will be given to all such reports.

The Gypsy Moth.

Prof. Washburn, of the Entomological Division of the Agricultural Department of the University of the state, is now in Europe studying the habits of the Brown Tail and Gypsy moths, the discovery of the former having been made in St. Paul recently, in a shipment of shrubbery from France, but careful inspection by the division, working in unison with the government at Washington, has thus far failed to find any of the latter. While the Brown Tail is a very dangerous pest, attacking most varieties of shrubbery, and particularly oak, maple, elm, apple, pear, plum and cherry trees, and through the shedding of hair causing serious ailments to the human family, it is not regarded of quite so serious a menace to the growth of trees as the Gypsy, at present attacking all kinds of trees in Massachusetts and other parts of New England, though the two are somewhat similar.

These pests are regarded as somewhat more dangerous in this country than in Europe, since in the countries where they originate there are parasites to destroy them, but coming here as larvae they are free from their natural enemies and propagate rapidly. Massachusetts has spent more than a million and a half dollars in fighting the Gypsy moths, and the federal government is devoting one experiment station to the exclusive breeding of a small, four-winged fly of minute proportions to war upon them.

The calamity that would befall Minnesota by an invasion of either of these moths would be great, especially in the forest portions, and hence the Extension division asks the co-operation of all people purchasing imported nursery stock to examine it carefully for evidence of either moth, the Brown Tail being in a web of leaves lined with silk, at the end of the twigs, while the Gypsy Moth comes in eggs, generally in clusters, on the bark of trees or shrubbery, and are of a light yellowish color. The fully developed caterpillar is of dark color, with double row of five blue spots on back anteriorly; posteriorly six pair of red spots. The female moth is of whitish color with wings imperfectly streaked with black, and spread of wings about two inches. Although the female moth has wings, it never flies.

Purchasers of foreign importations are requested to examine all stock with care and report the finding of webs or eggs of each respectively, as described, to the Division of Entomology, University Farm, St. Paul, so packed that neither insect nor eggs can be injured in coming through the mail nor escape.

Good seed, good culture, good crops and good farmers go together. Don't bank on luck.

Remember that good drainage is important on potato fields. Potatoes will stand less excess of moisture than most farm crops, and unless there is natural drainage resort should be had to artificial drainage.

After a hard day's work in the field, the horses will enjoy a few moments to roll in the yard or about the straw pile. Your horses will scratch themselves more in five minutes by rolling than you can with a curry-comb in thirty minutes.

It is poor policy to keep a sow a year at a cost of seven to twelve dollars and then go off to an auction or a dance and leave her without an attendant at the critical time of farrowing.

Bran, milk and pasturage are some of the bulky feeds well adapted to the real young pig. They help to distend the digestive system, which enables the pig to use cheaper and coarser feeds to better advantage than the pig raised on concentrates.

$5,000,000 WINNER

With Little Knowledge of Cards He Wins Title to Mining Property in Australia That Made Him Rich.

New York.—Five million dollars is the largest sum ever won in a card game at a single sitting, and the story of the vast winning carries the listener to a lonely hut in a rugged section of Australia, according to the chronicles of Ralph Nevill, the English historian of gambling, gaming, gamesters and the turf, says the New York Telegraph. The story is related as an instance of the whims of fortune, which in certain rare instances seems to delight in showering her gifts upon some one who is not a gambler.

A young Englishman, who had gone to Australia with a slender capital, was standing at the door of his hut just as night was falling, when two men who looked much like tramps approached. The Englishman accorded them such hospitality as his scant larder afforded, and then prepared to put them up for the night. Pipes were lit after dinner, and when conversation waned one of the strangers drew from his pockets a much soiled pack of cards.

Although the young host knew little of gaming, he finally consented, after much persuasion, to play for small stakes; but he stipulated that as soon as any of the three chanced to lose such money as they had in their pockets the play should cease. The game progressed for a time with varying fortune, but luck eventually went the way of the host and the pockets of his guests were emptied of their modest sums. The losers were anxious to continue, promising to remit their losing upon arrival at the nearest town, but the Englishman insisted that the agreement be kept.

"We agreed to play for ready money; your losses are trifling. Let's turn in and go to bed," he said.

The losers continued to insist, but their entreaties fell on deaf ears. Suddenly one of them said:

"Bill, where's that bit of paper we got up the country. Perhaps he'll play us for that." A soiled document was produced. It appeared to be the title of several plots of land up country. The holders apparently attached little value to it, but the host agreed that it should be allowed to represent £10. When the game was resumed luck continued with the host and the document soon passed into his possession. Then the trio retired for the night, and early the next day the strangers went their way, first having left an address, so that any question concerning the title could be referred to them.

Luck Went to the Host.

A week passed and the Englishman had forgotten about his slip of paper, which he had sent with some other securities to the nearest bank. He was standing in front of his hut about the same hour of the day, when a mounted stranger appeared, and, saying he had come a long way, begged shelter and food. Though roughly dressed the stranger was evidently possessed of money. He announced himself as desirous of purchasing plots of land, and said he was prepared to pay liberally. He pressed his host to tell him if he knew any lots for sale, and finally elicited from him the story of the scrap of paper. The story seemed vastly to amuse the stranger, and before he left he had offered $250 for it.

Ten days later the visitor returned, announcing that he had developed a veritable craze for the possession of the paper. He displayed £200 in cash and tendered it.

It dawned upon the young Englishman about this time that the paper really was valuable, and he told his visitor that it was not for sale.

Investigation proved that the document was a clear title to a property which held one of the richest mines in all Australia, and before he was through with it it had netted the man who had won the paper from the two wayfarers in the hut a sum very close to $5,000,000. The Englishman, who is still alive, later provided handsomely for the men from whom he had won.

He learned later that the well-to-do stranger who took such an interest in him was a speculator in mines, who, in one way or another, had learned that the property represented by the paper was highly valuable, but even he did not estimate the tremendous sum eventually realized by the man who would have been termed in most sporting circles as more or less of a "piker" at card games.

Sport Called Cruelty.

A curious objection has been raised by some anti-cruelty people against Londoners playing with Mexican jumping beans on a warm plate. It seems they draw a ring around the beans, and the owner of the first bean to jump out of the circle wins the money. Now, inside of each bean is a maggot, and the idea of making these helpless creatures hop and jump off a warm plate is a form of cruelty, and nothing warmer than the natural warmth of the hand should be permitted, say these kindly people.

EXCELLENT TRADE IN WESTERN CANADA

SPLENDID CROPS, BIG PRICES, AND PROSPEROUS OUTLOOK FOR THE FUTURE.

Throughout all of Canada, and especially in the Western Provinces of Canada, there is a buoyancy in every line of business that is fully warranted by every condition. The crops of the past year were what was expected, and the prices for grain of all kinds, put the farmers in a class by themselves. Many of them are independent, and many others have got well started on the road. The latest reports are that seeding is well under way in almost every district, and the prospects are that a vastly larger area than that under crop last year will be seeded early this spring. In the Lethbridge district, in Southern Alberta, steam and gasoline outfits, hundreds of them, are breaking up the prairie at a tremendous pace, but they work night and day. As soon as it becomes dark, gangs are changed, a head light attached, and on, on through the night until the first streak of dawn, these giant monsters with their seven or eight gangs of breaking plows, keep up the work. Then the more modest farmer is putting in the longest hours possible with his teams of horses or oxen. And what will the Country be like in August, when these fields have become yellowed with the literally golden grain. There will be one vast expanse of wheat field. And there will be a market for it, because it is the best grain grown, and the demand will be everywhere. As previously intimated business throughout Western Canada is sound and good. The grain production of 1909 has been the great factor in establishing the reputation of Western Canada, and it is worth talking about. It surpassed all previous records, both in regard to quality and quantity, and such an achievement was by no means easy. The limit has not been reached, and a large average increase may be expected during the next ten years. There will be odd seasons when a falling-off will occur, and it is the falling-off that causes alarms and panics in the commercial world. The plains have done their duty so far in the out-put of grain and it would be reasonable to make occasional allowances for slowing-up. The faster the rate of increase is now, the sharper will be the check when the production diminishes. But there are some unreasonable people who wonder why the growth of one year is not continued during the next, and at an even faster rate. These same unreasonable people are the ones who see flaws in the situation as soon as an indication is given that the startling advances have not been maintained.

A Terrible Risk.

Typhoid had broken out in their neighborhood and the family resorted to travel as the best means of precaution until the trouble should subside.

They arrived at Quebec by the morning boat, intending to take it to Montreal in the evening, but the sightseers got tired and returned early in the afternoon to find the top of the smokestack on a level with the dock, the tide having dropped 18 feet.

"Mamma," cried the little girl, "did God drink up all that water?"

"Yes, my child."

"Then hadn't we better tell him it wasn't boiled?"

Wrong View of Marriage.

"There would be less divorce," said ex-Gov. Pennypacker, "if there were fewer men like William Windle.

"William Windle embarked on an excursion steamer for Point Breeze, and a few miles out, as he paced the upper deck and drank in the bracing ozone, he spied his friend Jackson.

"'Why, Jackson, how are ye?' he exclaimed. 'Are ye out for pleasure, or is yer wife along?'"

Vindictive Cuss.

"Ugh!" spluttered Mr. Jones. "That nut had a worm in it."

"Here," urged a friend, offering him a glass of water, "drink this and wash it down."

"Wash it down!" growled Jones. "Why should I? Let him walk!"—Everybody's.

GLADNESS COMES~

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of illness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact that it is the only remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is, therefore, all-important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to purchase and note that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

It is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and assists in overcoming habitual constipation permanently, also biliousness and the many ills resulting therefrom. The great trouble with all other purgatives and aperients is not that they fail to act when a single dose is taken, but that they act too violently and invariably tend to produce a habit of body requiring constantly augmented doses. Children enjoy the pleasant taste and gentle action of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the ladies find it delightful and beneficial whenever a laxative remedy is needed, and business men pronounce it invaluable, as it may be taken without interfering with business and does not gripe nor nauseate. When buying note the name, California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of every package. Price, 50 cents a bottle.

DEATH OF JUDGE S. A. SWANSON

Passed Away Sunday Morning After a Very Brief Illness.

S. A. Swanson, judge of probate of Red Lake county, died at his home in this city early Sunday morning after an illness of only a few days. His death was unexpected and the announcement that he had passed away came as a shock to relatives and numerous friends in the city and in the county.

The career of S. A. Swanson was quite a remarkable one. At the age of twenty two years he was serving as register of deeds of Red Lake county and he had been much in the public service ever since. At the time of his death he was still a young man, for had he lived until June 26, this year, he would then have been only thirty six years old.

Solomon A. Swanson was born at Fort Lee, New Jersey, June 26, 1874, and was the oldest of the family of eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Peter Swanson. In 1881 Mr. Swanson's parents came to Red Lake county and settled in Black River township and they still reside on the old homestead.

Mr. Swanson after acquiring a common school education attended the state normal school at Moorhead. He taught a few years and in 1896, when Red Lake county was organized he was appointed the first register of deeds. For a number of years he was in the real estate and abstract business in this city. At the last election he was elected judge of probate and was serving his first term at the time of his death.

On January 2, 1902, Mr. Swanson and Miss Ella Adeline Richards were united in marriage and their home had always been in this city.

Funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning, Rev. Neil A. Gilchrist of Thief River Falls officiating. Members of the I. O. O. F., Rebecca and M. B. A. lodges attended in a body, and a large number of friends were in attendance to pay a last mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and to offer sympathy to the bereaved relatives. The floral offerings of the lodges and societies of which Judge Swanson was a member were beautiful. Short services were conducted at the Swedish Lutheran church at Wylie in the afternoon, Rev. Alex. Saul of St. Hilaire officiating, and interment was at the church cemetery.

Besides his widow, the deceased is survived by his father and mother, one brother and two sisters, all living in Black River township.

POTATOES ON TRACK

1000 Bushels for Distribution Among Farmers.

One thousand bushels of potatoes are now on track for distribution among farmers who wish them for seed. As stated in the last issue of the Gazette these potatoes can be secured without payment of any money. By agreeing to return two bushels of potatoes in the fall for each bushel of seed potatoes secured, the seed potatoes now on the track will be distributed without any cash payment.

The potatoes are Early Ohios and of excellent quality. It will be a big advantage in securing the top market price if all potatoes grown in the vicinity of Red Lake Falls are of one variety.

Like Their New Home.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Fournet and two children returned to Red Lake Falls this morning after spending several days in Crookston. Mrs. Fournet was here a week, Mr. Fournet coming down last Thursday, and they have since been busy packing up the remainder of their furniture and other household goods. Both are very much pleased with Red Lake Falls. The people are very cordial and it is a place where every business man wants to see other business men do well, there being no petty jealousies, which are such a drawback to the prosperity of many communities—Crookston Times.

EBERHART AND RAILROAD LEGISLATION

The Governor's Committee Appointments as Lieutenant Governor.

Congressman Tawney Not in Touch With People of His District.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul April 26—In an address last week before the commercial club at Albert Lea Senator Cushman of Owatonna, in urging the reform of railroad rates, took occasion to refer to the reactionary character of their railroad committee chosen by Lieutenant Govenor Eberhart. Senator Cushman has made the reform of railroad conditions in this state, particularly as they affect the country shipper, what may be called his hobby during the term he has represented Steele county, and therefore had occasion to know, perhaps even better than the lieutenant governor himself, the extent to which the senate railroad committee was dominated by railroad influences.

Republican Senators Reactionary.

While, of course the governor was not justified in the sweeping denial he made of Senator Cushman's charge that the committee as a whole was opposed to railroad reform, possibly Mr. Cushman's strictures of the governor may have been too severe. Senator Cushman should have made allowances for the character of the material Mr. Eberhart had to select from, and the duty he owed to his party to give its dominant element in the senate adequate representation. If Governor Eberhart selected reactionary railroad committee he had justification in the fact that the majority of the Republicans in the senate were reactionary, and submitted to the leadership of the well known representative of interests, Senator Ed. Smith of Minneapolis.

How the Committees were Selected.

Under the circumstances the hands of the lieutenant governor were tied. He was not in position to consult his own wishes. Once a former lieutenant governor, Hon. John L. Gibbs, attempted to do that. The result was that the senate took matters into its own hands. Governor Eberhart wisely avoided this humiliation by submitting his assignment to the senate leaders before they were announced. In this way he secured the approval of Senator Smith of the tax committee and the railroad committee, in which he was interested. In like manner Senator Sunn, who represents a St. Paul constituency and is incidentally the attorney for the Hamm Brewing company gave his approval to the temperance committee, and the presiding officer was given assurance that it was safe to go ahead.

The Late Judge S. A. Swanson.

A Progressive Alliance.

In his controversy with Senator Cushman the governor argues cleverly that the committees in the senate must have been progressive because of the reform-legislation enacted. Perhaps the governor carried this a little too far, for it is a matter of record that no measures of reform was adopted by the senate by a majority of Republican votes. It was joining with progressive Republicans that anything that was accomplished in the way of reform. The beneficial legislation of the sessions of 1907 and 1909 was not Republican legislation. It resulted from a coalition of reform forces of both parties.

Democratic Initiative.

The fact is indeed that much of the reform legislation enacted owes its inception to the initiative of Democratic members of the senate. Thus the commodity rate bill, from which much had been hoped and from which is still hoped and when the litigation concerning it comes to an end, was introduced by Senator Shaller of Dakota county. The two-cent fare bill, which already has saved the traveling public hundreds of thousands of dollars and of which practically every resident of the state has at some time had the benefit, was, if my memory serves me, introduced and, certainly was forced out of the committee and its passage secured by Senator Moonan of Waseca county. The same thing is true of practically all forward legislation passed during the last four years. It becomes law because the Democratic senators laid aside for the time being their prejudices and co-operated with a minority of progressive Republicans to secure legislation in the interest of the people.

Tawney Attacks Day.

Since his return to Washington Congressman Tawney has taken occasion to animadvert on the harmony which prevails among Democrats and progressive Republicans in this state.

Instead of recognizing the unanimity of sentiment which is behind it all, he attributes the harmony to the machinations of the chairman of the Democratic state central committee. This, of course, for a political purpose, for Mr. Tawney knows as well as anybody else does that the real reason why there is no Democratic opposition to Mr. Davis of the Third district and to Mr. Lindbergh in the Sixth is because Mr. Davis and Mr. Lindbergh in the vital matter of tariff and of opposition to Cannon, and Cannonism represented the sentiment and carried out the wishes of the Democratic voters of those districts. Why, then, should Democrats oppose them? If there is opposition in other districts it is not because of anything Mr. Day has done or contemplates doing, but because in these matters the people have been betrayed and their interests disregarded by those who assume to represent them.

Tawney Not in Touch With the People.

Mr. Tawney is, of course, to be excused for being deceived by outward appearances. He is in the state so little and that for so short a time that he can have no adequate knowledge of the state of public opinion. It is the more difficult for him to acquire that knowledge because when he is here he is constantly surrounded by time-servers and flatterers who studiously withhold unpleasant information from him. To that in large measure must no doubt be attributed the fact that Mr. Tawney is so deplorably out of touch with the district he represents that practically

GOT ELEVEN WOLVES

Walt Swanson of River Falls Township Fortunate.

Walt Swenson of River Falls township has made a larger killing of wolves than any one in the county for a number of months.

He was in town last Friday and brought with him the carcasses of eleven wolves and received the bounty from Auditor A. A. Latendresse. The wolves were all cubs so Mr. Swanson received the comparatively small sum of $33 for his big killing.

"Pussyfoot" Johnson May Make Dry Belt Wider and Then Some.

The following communication received by H. H. Finrow, president of the village council at Plummer, from Special Agent Johnson, and published in the last issue of the Plummer Pioneer, will be of interest as a statement of the kind of campaign the Indian agent expects to carry on:

Reference is hereby made to your letter dated April 13th 1910, in which you request that the saloons be permitted to continue in Plummmer in violation of the Treaty with the Chippewa Indians of 1883.

The facts in this matter so far as Plummer is concerned are these:

After we issued the first order closing the Mahnomen country bootleggers and Indians began going up to Plummer on the evening train and returning on the midnight train with grips full of liquor which they secured in your two saloons. Both of these saloons catered to this illegal trade. I took the pains at the time to send one of my officers to follow a bunch of Indians to Plummer on one of the trips. He caught them in the act of buying liquor in your saloons. Instead of making arrests the officers warned both of the saloon keepers. For a short time things were a little better but I soon began getting complaints from your citizens that this traffic with Indians and bootleggers was being resumed. I sent officers to Plummer to investgate. The compliants were well founded. Half a dozen sales were made in both your saloons in the presence of my men.

Under these circumstances there is nothing left for me to do except to enforce the provisions of the treaty, which excludes spirituous liquors.

If, as you fear, an attempt is made to sell liquor just north of the south boundary line of town 152, I shall issue another order extending the boundary line of the closed district.

It might as well be understood now, that these boundary lines will be extended from time to time as may be necessary. It is for the liquor dealers themselves to determine how far they will compel me to go on in this respect.

Very respectfully,
WILLIAM E. JOHNSON,
Chief Special Agent.

GROWING FLAX IN THE NORTHWEST

Is it True That Flax Is An Exhausting Crop For the Soil?

Minneapolis Journal: Flax is one of the great money crops of the northwest. The three states of Minnesota and the two Dakotas raised last year about ninety per cent of all the flax grown in the United States. And yet the raising of flax, despite the high prices paid for the crop, shows a tendency to fall off. The reason for this is the widespread notion that flax is very exhaustive to the soil, and to raise it as a steady crop means the depletion of the land.

The researches of the expimental stations have demonstrated that flax has a bad name that it does not deserve. Professoor H. L. Bolley, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, issued a bulletin on flax culture, in which he quoted with approval Russian experiments, showing that flax takes less out of the soil than wheat or barley, and he proved that wheat following flax does much better than wheat following wheat. Minnesota experiments shown in Bulletin 47, of the Agricultural Experiment Station prove that wheat takes 210 pounds of mineral matter per acre out of the soil, barley 218 pounds, oats 205 pounds and corn 200 pounds. Flax on the other hand takes but 87 pounds. Neither does it absord as much soil moisture as does other grains.

The bad reputation flax has acquired among farmers is due to the fact that it often leaves the fields "flax sick." It has been proved however, that this condition is due, not to the raising of flax, but to the growth of a fungus that lives on the flax plant.

This fungus so thoroughly permeates the soil that in time it becomes impossible to raise flax on it. The remedy is to use good seed and to sterilize it with Gormalin before planting. The same treatment prevents flax wilt, which destoys many fields where the seed has not been treated.

Professor Bolley has developed a variety of flax that is wilt-proof. Experiments have also developed varieties that produce a great yield. The solution of the flax porblem therefore, seems to be, not to stop raising flax but to procure the best possible seed, and before planting to treat it with a formalin spray.

The flax industry has become one of the most importrtant of the northwest. The demand for flaxseed is constantly growing, and there seems not the slightest danger of overproduction. The wise farmer will therefore, raise a good crop of flax every year taking care to rotate his crops in the approved fashion. But flax should take its place in the cycle of crops, and should not be shunned because of wrong ideas about its effect on the soil. The annual flax acreage in the northwest ought to increase steadily, because it is so enormously profitable crop, if only due care is exercised in selection and treatment of seed, and in cultivation.

BORCHER'S BANQUET

His Friends Wish Him Much Success in His New Venture.

Last Thursday evening about twenty-five of the business and professional men of the city sat down to a banquet at the Grand View hotel given in honor of Fred Borchers on the eve of his departure for the west.

After the banquet had been enjoyed attorney F. A. Grady as toastmaster asked a number of the guests to say something appropriate to the occasion. Many joined in the expression of the wish that Mr. Borchers and his family might enjoy prosperity and happiness in their new home. Before the banqueters dispersed they by a rising vote adopted resolutions recommending Mr. Borchers to the people of his new home as a man of business integrity. The resolutions will be put into permanent form and will be published in the next issue of the Gazette.

Mr. Borchers, in company with Fred Morin of Crookston, a son of Aug. Morin of this city, will engage in the retail lumber business at Missoula, Montana. Mr. Morin has been manager of the Crookston Lumber company's yard at Crookston for a number of years and is a man of much experience in the lumber trade. Messrs. Borchers and Morin are going to an inviting field and there is little doubt that they will make a big success of their business venture in Montana.

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

$1.50 Per Year in Advance

At any rate we've had a lot of real nice weather this spring.

Mr. Bryan says not being elected president has its compensations, and doubtless William Howard Taft agrees with him.

From a general size-up of the situation we infer that the Republicans don't want the durned old house of representatives anyway.

Fortunately the average voter who isn't after an office doesn't owe allegiance to any party organization. He believes in majority rule, but it is the majority rule of good citizenship and clean political methods.

"Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Askalon, but don't forget that John Lind will be offered the presidency of the state university, but somehow there is an overwhelming fear that Governor Eberhart and the Republican leaders will not favor the movement.

The Republican State convention will be held in St. Paul, Tuesday, June 21. The county conventions are to be held the Friday preceding that date, June 17. There will be in all 1,075 delegates at the convention, the basis being one delegate for 250 votes or major fraction thereof cast for the state ticket and five delegates at large from each county.

The Saturday Evening Post thinks that Andrew Carnegie doesn't give proper credit on the corner-stones of the libraries he has endowed. The Post suggests that the inscription should read: "Built by Andrew Carnegie and the various Republican majorities in congress voting for a protective tariff." The suggestion is good for it points an object lesson to the indifferent voters.

The Democratic party has before it the greatest opportunity in sixty years. But as the Little Falls Herald sagely remarks: "More than ever is wisdom, honesty, and good sense needed by the statesmen of the Democratic party. That party has the golden opportunity. Only foolishness and fatuity, which would be criminal, could prevent the Democratic party from achieving success. But it most deserves it."

In a recent speech before the Stillwater commercial club Governor Eberhart urges the smaller cities of the state to go after manufacturing enterprises, on the theory that the Northwest is soon to become a great manufacturing center. This is good advice, but the governor missed the vital point. It would be much better if he would urge an equitable freight rate which would put the smaller city in a position to compete with St. Paul and Minneapolis. The present freight tariff is the greatest injustice, and the country towns of Minnesota cannot grow and prosper under it. Some form of distant tariff will soon become an acknowleged necessity to the general welfare.

An exchange says some person mathematically inclined has been trying the figures on the proposed Rockfeller philanthropy "foundation" and finds that in 1970 the fund will have reached thirty nine billion dollars or equal to all the present national debts of the world. None of this mind you, to to be taxed and to be administered by future Rockfeller estates. So vast a sum devoted to charity and philanthropy could be made to do a great deal of good in the world, in the same manner, properly handled but the perpetuation of the greatest fortune in the world, in this manner, even under the disguise of philanthropy, is rather rasping to the sensibilities of the masses of the American people.

The silence on the part of Republican politicians and state officials as to the Rochester election is noticeable. Probably they are convinced that insurgency is more a mirage.

The Republicanism of the Wadena Pioneer Journal will not be questioned by those familiar with Minnesota politics, and the following criticism of President Taft and his policies cannot be charged to a newspaper looking for an opportunity to appear unfriendly:

"President Taft is a very genial, honorable and able gentleman, but he blunders badly in meeting important developments. No one desires to pick out his friends and confidants, but in standing by Ballinger, Cannon, Hitchcock and others of that character he makes himself particularly offensive. Nothing he can do or say will righten matters in this respect, for the common people have a pronounced dislike for them, and do not take kindly to the flagrant moves of the president in their behalf."

According to the Milwaukee Journal the Republicans of Indiana have gone further than to repudiate the enormously excessive duties of the new tariff law—they virtually have condemned the tariff policy of their party. If the rule that they prescribe for imposing protective duties should be applied, the high tariff wall would come down with a crash. For the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad is infinitesimal. In fact, save where the tariff operates to enhance the price of raw materials, the cost of production is as low as it is in Great Britian or Germany. In some lines it is even lower, as is attested by the fact that our manufacturers compete with and undersell their foreign rivals in the open market.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Brainerd Tribune: John Lind of Minneapolis for governor and W. E. McEwen of Duluth for lieutenant governor is said to be the ticket advocated by Frank Day, chairman of the Democratic state committee. That ticket would sure make a strong combination.

Hutchinson Leader: We regret very much to note that Knut Nelson, who has often been found standing manfully for the right seems to be leaning towards a whitewash for Ballinger. It is inconceivable that, with the evidence there is before him, the senator can believe Ballinger innocent of the charges against him.

Breckenridge Gazette: Boost for Minnesota, and more particularly for Wilkin county. If you must knock, go and knock your head against a brick wall. It won't hurt the wall and it might improve your head.

Cass Lake Times: With the insurgents making three insurgents grow where one grew before, and the Socialists making Milwaukee more famous than its beer, although one Milwaukee does not make a party, we may not be jumping at a very erroneous conclusion to see the best of the two old parties absorbed by two new ones—the Insurgents and the Socialists. What a vast crematory awaits the standpatters and regulars.

Hibbing Mesaba Ore: The tide has set too strongly against the Taft administration to be stemmed even at this early day, and every time that Mr. Taft or any of his body servants attempt to force it down the throats of the people that the present tariff law is a redemption of a Republican promise and that it is a good law, he is only widening the crack in the foundation, only hastening a crash that will be mighty. The temper of the people is to be seen from Massachusetts, from Indiana, from Wisconsin and from all points where recent elections have been held, and it is a warning that it is a folly for Mr. Taft and his political friends not to heed.

Fergus Falls Weekly: At the late conservation congress at St. Paul, Prof. Willis brought out the fact that there is more net profit in one acre of 80 bushel corn than in four acres of 30 bushel corn. This may seem strange to some of our boys, but expenses count up fast, particularly when they are almost as great as the income.

EBERHART AND RAILROAD LEGISLATION

every vote he has cast in recent years and every attitude he has assumed has subjected him to criticism and censure. Mr. Tawney would surely never have assumed the antagonistic attitude to President Roosevelt and the Roosevelt policies which has made his record conspicuous had he appreciated fully how completely Mr. Roosevelt himself and the policies which have added glory to Republican achievement were approved by the people he was elected to represent. Mr. Tawney is too intelligent a man and too familiar with the spirit which animates our constitution—too conscientious moreover and solicitious to discharge his full duty to the people who have honored him to have made some effort to represent the sentiment in his own district had he been correctly informed as to what that sentiment was.

An Opportunity Presented.

The remedy, of course, is to afford Mr. Tawney a better opportunity of familiarizing himself with the progressiv sentiment of the state. His ability and his worth is readily conceded. The pity is that they should have been misdirected for want of leisure to study home conditions and to familiarize himself with home sentiment. Those are really Mr. Tawney's best friends who suggest his temporary retirement. No one who wished him well would want him to cling to office for the mere sake of exercising power. That is what Aldrich and Cannon have done. They will be followed in retirement by execration which Mr. Tawney has yet the privalege of evading.

County Option Troublesome.

Our county option friends seem bent on hatching out trouble for the Republican convention. The public is not generally familiar with the effective character of the campaign they are conducting. For instance during the present week a series of meetings are being held in Rochester by Hon. Seaborn Wright, the eloquent Georgian, an experienced campaigner for the county option cause. No one who heard him while at the convention here in St. Paul in March will be likely to question the strength of the appeal he will make in the country town like Rochester to the people.

Mr. Youngdahl claims that from thirty to forty per cent of the delegates to the Republican state convention will be county option men, and they will have but one purpose at the convention, namely to compel the adoption of a county option plank.

The Republicans Embarassed.

That the Republicans will adopt such a plank is in the last degree improbable. It was said that at the last Republican convention Dar Reese was the author of the temperance plank. Some one else may be employed to write it this time, as it seems to be a part of the plan of campaign to keep Dar and his kind in the background, but no one questions that whatever temperance plank is adopted this must be acceptable to the same interests which approved it two years ago. The convention will have no recourse except to turn down the county optionists if it cannot placate them. In that event, Mr. Youngdahl announces, and he no doubt speaks for the management of the county option campaign, the delegates the anti-saloon league can control will walk out of the convention.

A Serious Defection.

In its palmiest days the party could withstand no such defection as that and win. What it may do with Governor Eberhart as a canditdate is of course still an open question. He may have some hidden sources of strength. It is said indeed that his conservation propaganda has strengthened him in northern Minnesota; and many have had an opportunity to be impressed by his eloquence. Then the event may prove that Mr. Youngdahl will be unable to marshal his delegates just the way he wants to. Whichever way it turns out the Republicans seem to have a difficult situation to deal with, rendered all the more so by the unpopularity of the national administration and it's utter incapacity to give the leaders here any support. The fact is that the national policy being attacked as it must be by the two congressional insurgents and the five near insurgents in order that they may have any chance at all of election is likely to prove a serious handicap to the success of the state ticket.

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

The skin is composed of two distinct layers. One is known as the epidermis, or outer skin, which has no fibres, and serves principally as a covering to the body, and a protection from outward dangers to the delicate flesh beneath. The other layer is known as the derma, or true skin, and is composed of elastic fibres, fat tissue, glands, lymphatics, nerves, etc. The thousands of tiny veins and arteries with which it is interlaced constantly supply every fibre and tissue with healthful properties from the circulation to keep the skin smooth and perfect.

This is changed, however, when the blood becomes infected with humors, acids or impurities. Instead of constantly supplying rich, nutritive properties to the skin, the circulation deposits the acrid impurity with which it is contaminated, into the sensitive fibres and tissues. This causes irritation and inflammation, which splits or breaks the thin outer cuticle, while the tissues beneath ulcerate and discharge upon the surface in the form of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Tetter, etc. There is likewise a dry form of skin diseases, such as Acne, Psoriasis, etc. In these varieties the humor in the blood diseases and inflames the glands, hair follicles, etc., causing them to swell and protrude to the outer surface. Pimples, rashes, eruptions and like troubles, are all dependent on imperfect blood, and no one can have a good complexion, free from humiliating blemishes, unless the skin is kept healthy by good blood.

S.S.S. cures Skin Diseases of every kind by neutralizing the acids and removing the humors from the blood. It cools the acid-heated circulation, builds it up to normal strength, multiplies its rich, nutritious corpuscles, and adds to its purity in every way. Then the skin, instead of being irritated, inflamed and diseased by acrid impurities or fiery humors, is nourished, soothed and softened by a cooling, healthy stream of blood. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and therein lies its ability to cure skin diseases. Book on Skin Diseases and medical advice free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

S.S.S. CURED HER.

Some time ago I was troubled with a severe skin affection called Acne. Small pimples would appear on my face and neck which would in time fester and become inflamed. My complexion was muddy and sallow and most unsightly. I chanced to read about S.S.S., and concluded to give it a trial; the result was entirely satisfactory, my complexion soon becoming clear, the pimples disappearing, and my skin became soft and smooth. I cannot too highly recommend S.S.S. to any who are likewise afflicted.

WHAT THEY NEEDED

By HARRY VAN AMBERG

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Having occasion to see Gunter after office hours on a matter of business, I went to his room. It was 9 o'clock, a time when young people are supposed to be enjoying themselves in their evening amusements and married people are sitting around the hearthstone or the big lamp on the center table reading, dozing or listening to the chatter of the children going to bed.

But Gunter—never before in my life have I lighted upon a more desolate situation for a man in good health, prosperous and without any skeleton in his closet. He was sitting in an easy chair, looking at the wall. When I entered something of a change came over his face. He seemed pleased that any one should break the stillness.

"Great heavens, Gunter!" I exclaimed. "What are you sitting here alone for?"

"Because I have no one to sit with me."

"Then why not go out?"

"I've been going out for years, and I'm tired of it."

I stayed with Gunter all the evening. The upshot of our talk other than business was this: I agreed to pilot him into something better than a room with no one but himself in it. My cousin, Margaret Tucker, twenty-eight years old—Gunter was forty—was just as needful of something better than a single room as was Gunter. I told Gunter that he couldn't afford any longer to wait to fall in love: if he did he would likely pass the rest of his life in loneliness. If he married he couldn't be any worse off than he was, and he might be a great deal better off. I used the same argument with Margaret. I vouched for her to Gunter as being an excellent person and for Gunter to her to the same effect. I introduced them. Gunter made an expected proposal. It was accepted, and they were married.

I was shocked at what I had done. Suppose they didn't get on together. How would I feel at having tied them up in a knot they couldn't unloose without a lot of trouble? One day I saw Gunter coming toward me on the street. He looked glum. There was no side street between me and him for me to turn down, so I was obliged to face him. I nerved myself for the meeting and, assuming a lot of heartiness, ran up to him and, grabbing him by the hand, shook it warmly and said:

"How are you, old man? Happy as a clam, eh?"

There was no fervor in his affirmative response.

"Come," I went on, "tell me how you and Mag are getting on."

"Oh, we'd get on well enough, but there are certain things about women that rub a man the wrong way."

"Such as?"

"Well, Mag gives way to me in certain things I don't care anything about, but if anything of importance comes up between us she must have her own way."

"Well?"

"I wouldn't have you breathe it. I say it in the strictest confidence. I'm thinking of a separation."

"Good gracious!"

I saw he was being ruffled and tried to soothe him, but it was of no avail. He declared that his wife had an ideal of a husband in her mind, and she was trying to make him over to conform to that ideal. I left him, feeling that I had not succeeded in comforting him and cursing my folly at having led him into matrimony.

Desiring to see Mag alone and expecting that her husband would not go home at that time of day, I called on her.

"Well, Mag," I said, "how goes matrimony?"

"Oh, matrimony's well enough! It's the man one marries that's the trouble."

"What's the matter?"

"My husband is unreasonable."

"About what?"

"Well, he gives way to me in things that I don't care anything about, but if anything of importance comes up he's a perfect tyrant."

In thinking that Gunter wouldn't go home at that time of day I had made a mistake. While I was talking with Mag he came in. I was irritated at the way my plans for those I had wished to benefit had turned out and was in no mood to meet the two together.

"If you two people," I said, "insist on quarrelling instead of enjoying the happiness that has come to you I can't help it. I did the best I knew how for both of you, but"—

"Our affairs are none of your business," said Mag fiercely.

"Right you are," said her husband. "What right have you to come here and meddle?"

"I meddle?"

Seeing that if I remained where I was a minute longer there would be an explosion, I crammed my hat down on my head and rushed out of the room, slamming the door behind me.

I went to my office in a fever. I couldn't work. I couldn't sit still. I walked the floor. Presently there came a ring at the telephone bell.

"Who is it?" I asked.

"Mag. Come over to dinner."

"What for?" irritated.

"I wish to thank you for something."

"All right. I'll come. But thank me now."

"We needed some one to turn against instead of each other. We're having a delightful makeup."

TERREBONNE.

A week ago Miss Howald of Red Lake and Miss Waber of Thief River Falls were the guests of Miss Landreville at the French rectory.

Mr. C. L. Cadiaux and wife and Mr. Regis Gagnon and wife drove to Crookston to attend the funeral of the late Andres Prudhomme.

Geo. Cyr of Red Lake and his young wife attended mass here Sunday and visited with Jas. Champoux.

Sunday the young men of the town began to organize a baseball club. They played for a while and drew a big crowd. The Misses Latendresse and Zaiser, accompanied by Jos. Helm and Billy Erickson, were among the applauders of the young gentlemen.

With the good weather the farmers are again busy with the sowing. The ground is in good condition.

Dat takes her reg'lar station
When we really needs de light.

Dar's alwuys dis hero danger
Dat makes trouble in de end—

Old Maids' Beds.

"This is our special old maid's bed," said the salesman. "We are selling it like hot cakes. I don't believe there's an old maid in the township sleeps on any other pattern.

"What's its peculiar advantage to old maids? Why, of course, it's lowness. Don't you see how low it is? It goes right down to the ground. No man on earth could crawl under it.

"So this is the bed that old maids buy. No man could hide under it. So it doesn't have to be looked under uneasily the last thing before turning off the light."—Minneapolis Journal.

You May Not Hear Them Knocking.

Summer soon along the ways
Her gold will be unlocking,
But howl not high for happy days.
You may not hear 'em knockin'.

They'll come to valley and to hill.
You'll see the dollars glisten,
But for their twinklin' footsteps still
Bend low your ears and listen.

Bright will be every earthly day when
They shall tell their story,
But don't you scare 'em all away by Shoutin' too much "Glory!"
—Frank L. Stanton.

His Hunting.

"Do you enjoy hunting?"

"No."

"Perhaps you have never had favorable opportunities for enjoying the sport. What have you hunted mostly?"

"Before I was married I generally hunted for a boarding place. Since then most of my hunting has been for flats."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Proud of Him.

The doctors point to him with pride.
They view him with a friendly smile.
When he goes by they turn aside
And speak about his dash and style.

They point to him as one who walks
A monument unto their skill
And mention him in all their talks—
The gentleman has paid his bill.
—Detroit Free Press.

The Retort Courteous.

"I hate to press this bill, Mr. Slowpay," said the tailor, taking a much wrinkled memorandum of accounts from his pocket, "but"—

"Oh, don't bother, Snip," said Slowpay genially. "You don't need to press it. I don't mind wrinkles in it at all. The fact is I've got a dozen fresh copies of it at home already."

Jumping Stunts.

We know we've heard that years ago—
It may have been high noon—
A cow went out and did a stunt
By jumping o'er the moon.
How true that is we cannot say,
We'll try not to convince,
But surely beef and other meats
Have jumped some ever since.
—Yonkers Statesman.

Up to Him.

"See here," asked the cautious stranger, "if I decide to stay here for a week how much is it going to cost me?"

"You can answer that best yourself," replied the clerk of the fashionable hotel. "How much have you got?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

The Only Balm.

When lovely woman stoops to folly
And sports a hatpin two feet long
What charm can soothe the melancholy
Of those she jabbeth in the throng?

To heal the mangling of the spikes,
Is just to know the playful dolly
Will wear and do whate'er she likes.

ABNER A. FLETCHER

Lost His Life in a Railroad Accident at New Castle, Wyoming.

Word has been received here of the death of Abner A. Fletcher, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Fletcher of this city. Mr. Fletcher was injured on a railroad at New Castle, Wyoming, Tuesday morning and died at 11 o'clock. That is all the information that has been received and just how Mr. Fletcher received the injuries that resulted in his death is not known. Mr. Fletcher was a young attorney, a graduate of the law school of the University of North Dakota in the class of 1908.

The remains will be brought to this city for interment, but since they cannot reach here until Saturday or Monday definite announcement of arrangements for the funeral cannot be made and an obituary will be published in the next issue.

Mr. Fletcher had many friends in this city who will be pained to learn of his death and who offer sincere sympathy to the parents and brothers and sisters in their bereavement.

H. Clement, proprietor of Terrebonne cheese factory No. 70, wishes to announce to his many patrons that his factory is better equipped and more modern than ever before, and he will begin making cheese next Monday, May 2. Those wishing to haul cream may do so as he is prepared to make both butter and cheese.

Storm Was Not an Injury.

Hallock Enterprise: It is reported that the storm which set in last Saturday and continued with snow and ice for nearly three days all over the middle-west followed the course of the proverbial ill wind. It blew bad, but it also blew good. While the fruit crop further south has been damaged to the extent of several thousand dollars, the benefit to the larger grains will much more than offset this loss according to leading grain men. Here and over the entire Red River valley fruit blossoming was not far enough advanced to do any great damage, but much of the seeding had already been done when the storm set in and to this it is said the very best thing that could happen as the snow has left enough water and moisture in the ground to last several weeks. Of course, here there is lots of seeding to be done yet, but farmers will be at work quite generally again by the end of the present week.

Miss Hazel Bourdon was at Crookston the first of the week in attendance at the Christian Endeavor convention as a representative of the local society. The convention elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Rev. H. W. Georgi, of East Grand Forks, president; Miss Gertrude Stone, vice-president; Miss Nellie Knott, Bemidji, secretary; and Wm. Morris, Tenstrike, treasurer.

AN ELEVATOR OF SERVANTS

By ESTHER VANDEVEER.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Mrs. Barcarole was an up to date woman. She understood the monopoly question, the high price for provisions question and the labor question.

The servant question Mrs. Barcarole considered part of the other questions. The condition of the servant market, she argued, grew out of the education of those classes who formerly went into service. Being educated, they considered themselves and were to be considered as good as those who would be their masters. To serve they regarded demeaning. To work in an office, a store or a factory was not demeaning. Ergo there were no servants to be had.

Mrs. Barcarole, having thus thought the matter out, applied herself to inventing a remedy. A change must be wrought in the condition of the servant. The work attached to service must be uplifted to meet the more elevated condition of the person who served.

Her plan to produce such a social level was this: She would give an occasional sociable, procure refreshments from a caterer, invite her servants into her parlor and introduce them to her guests.

Mrs. Barcarole's reformatory effort would have appeared more feasible if she could have induced educated people to become her servants and then have introduced them socially. But as she was unable to start her reform from this position she was obliged to start it from the opposite. She must first improve the condition and then induce educated people to go out to service.

On the evening of her first soiree there was much agitation in the servants' hall.

"What are y' goin' to say to the ladies and gentlemen, Ellen?" asked the cook of the waitress.

"I'm goin' to say it's a fine night and you're lookin' very well this evenin'."

"But suppose the leddy or the gentleman looks sick."

"It doesn't matter. When the quality meets the compliments fly."

"Y' scare me," said the cook. "I don't know any compliments to throw at 'em."

"I do," said Thomas, the butler. "Lean up ag'in me, Marg, an' I'll fire 'em for y'."

At this the bell tinkled a signal that the guests were assembling and the servants were expected in the parlor. James, the coachman, entered at the moment, and all four, the men pulling down their waistcoats, the women smoothing imaginary aprons, stood at the foot of the stairs, each waiting for the others to proceed. The butler was shoved to the front, and the four of them ascended and entered the drawing room, where they found a number of guests assembled.

Mr. Barcarole, at his wife's suggestion—he knew his peace of mind depended on obliging—took the coachman and the butler to the ladies, introducing them, while the hostess did the same by the women. Thomas was being introduced to a lady when the doorbell rang. Whether from force of habit or from a desire to beat a retreat from unaccustomed conditions, he bolted to answer the call. James having been presented to a lady, the following brief dialogue ensued:

Lady—Mrs. Barcarole is a charming hostess. Don't you think so?

James—Beautiful, ma'am.

Lady—She gives very pleasant parties.

James—And lots to eat, ma'am.

Mary, the cook, crossed her hands before her and stood looking up at the ceiling. A gentleman, seeing her unprovided for, approached her. Another short dialogue was the result.

"Illigint," was the brief response.

"Are you a resident of the city?"

"Do I live in it, do y' mean?"

"Yes."

"And what do y' want to know that for?"

The gentleman looked surprised and excused himself to speak to a friend across the room.

Ellen, the waitress, got on better than any of the rest. A youngish gentleman in a very low cut vest and a very high collar was introduced to her by the hostess.

"Your first appearance in society?" he remarked, with a query.

"Yes; I'm a bud."

"I thought so. I've not seen you out before."

"No; I'm not goin' much this season; I mean, being a bud, I weren't out last season. Are you a gentleman bud?"

The young man looked at her quizzically, replied that he was a Buddhist and said he must speak to the hostess.

When refreshments were handed around neither the cook nor the waitress could resist returning to a position in which she was more at home. They both snatched the dishes from the outside help and for the first time during the evening felt comfortable. James fortunately was chatting with the president of a horse car company and found a familiar subject in diseases of the horse.

As soon as the refreshments had been devoured the guests began to depart.

"How did you like the drawin' room, Mary?" asked Ellen.

A Born Leader.

"He's born to be a leader," his parents fondly said
As proudly they beheld him upon his downy bed.
"See how his forehead bulges!" exclaimed his doting dad.
"His jaw is shaped exactly like that Napoleon had."

"He's born to be a leader," they said with honest joy
That time he bossed the household while he was yet a boy.
And they were right in thinking him sent to have command.
He has become a leader—he leads a village band.

Buy A MONARCH
MALLEABLE RANGE!
It Pays For Itself.

BUYING a Monarch Range is like investing a little money at such splendid interest that it pays back the principal in a year or so, and then for unlimited years brings a return of from 25 to 50 per cent.

Because—

A Monarch requires but little more than one-half the fuel burned up by a "steel range" of the common type. Moreover, it does away with the usual repair bills—saves much time—eliminates the hard part of kitchen work—and in addition it does its work so well it satisfies as no other can.

You dont have to take our word for these things

Investigate for yourself the way the Monarch is built. Let us show you how the Malleable Iron and steel plates are rivited together, making air-tight joints without the use of STOVE PUTTY. See the brightly polished top and body, which will retain their fine appearance forever without the use of stoveblacking. Also notice the duplex draft and other exclusive features. These things PROVE our statements.

Monarch MALLEABLE
The "Stay Satisfactory" Range

Steel Ranges built in the ordinary way are wasteful—extravagant

They are not made in the right way nor even of the right kind of material. It is not wise to buy one, nor even to continue to use one, though you may have had it only a few years. Its seams have already opened up—the stove bolts worked loose, the putty has fallen out and these "air leaks" into the flues and firebox cause a waste of fuel every year equal to a large part of the cost of a Monarch.

A Personal Word To Intending Buyers

In ranges as well as other lines, we aim to handle the best to be had. Our many years' experience in the range business has acquainted us with all makes of ranges and we know that the Monarch is the one and only range that could justify the above claim.

MANY BLOCKS OF CEMENT SIDEWALK

Decision by City Council That Improvements Must be Made.

Work to be Completed Early in the Summer—Big Improvement.

In this issue of the Gazette will be found five sidewalk resolutions passed by the city council at the meeting held last Thursday night. Many blocks of side walks are condemned and the resolutions provide that cement sidewalks are to be constructed.

New cement walks are to be constructed on Main street from the Kaus block, occupied by Fournet, north to the end of the block; from the Grand View hotel south to the end of that block; from Harren's corner north past the post office; from the Bouchers building north to the railway right of way. Several blocks are also to be built in the residence district from Paul's hotel west as far as the Bouchert residence.

This is an improvement that Red Lake Falls has been in need of for a long time and everybody should be glad that the work is to be done. Here's hoping too, that the council will pass more resolutions providing for the construction of good walks in other parts of town. The sidewalks are to be completed by the 1st of July.

ABNER A. FLETCHER

Funeral Held Sunday Afternoon at the Presbyterian Church.

The funeral of Abner A. Fletcher, announcement of whose death was made in the last issue of the Gazette, was held at the Presbyterian church at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Rev. Neil A. Gilbrist officiating. Ernest Fletcher, a brother of the deceased, arrived in Red Lake Falls with the remains Saturday morning.

The announcement of Mr. Fletcher's untimely death came as a shock not only to his parents and brothers and sisters, but to many friends in the city who held him in high esteem. The church building would not hold the large number of people who were in attendance at the funeral to offer sympathy to the bereaved relatives and to pay a last mark of respect to the memory of the deceased.

On April 11 Abner A. Fletcher was twenty-eight years old. He was born at Brasher, N. Y. The family came to Minnesota in September, 1882, and settled at Moorhead. In October, 1888, they came to Red Lake Falls and the family home has been here ever since. Abner graduated from the local high school with the class of 1903 and the law school of the North Dakota University in 1908. A year ago last December he located at Cheyenne, N. D., in the practice of law. He came home last December and spent a few weeks here. In January he went west with the intention of locating. He did not find a satsfactory location and accepted a position as brakeman, expecting in his travels to learn of a good location.

Since the last issue of the Gazette the particulars of the accident in which Mr. Fletcher met his untimely death have been received.

For some months Abner had been working as a freght brakeman on the Burlington railroad in Wyoming, and for several weeks prior to the accident was employed on the Cambria branch with headquarters at Newcastle. Abner had started out early Tuesday morning on the ore train on the Cambria branch. Cambria is a little town about ten miles north of Newcastle. Two ore cars had been cut off from the train and Abner was switching them to an ore shute. The shute is a wooden affair and there is a space of perhaps six inches between the car and the side of the shute. Either Abner did not know or had forgotten that there was so little room, as he was hanging to the side of the car when it entered the shute. He was badly crushed, five ribs broken and his breast pierced. As soon as he was rescued he was taken back to Newcastle—a run of about twenty minutes. He lived an hour after the accident, and every attention was given him, but the nature of the injuries precluded a possibility of recovery. He was taken to the boarding house at Newcastle, where he died an hour after the accident. With him at the last were the train crew and the landlady. Although he was apparently conscious during all the time, he did not try to talk and even the urgent appeals for information as to the whereabouts of his people brought no response until a few moments before the end. Abner then gave Dr. F. F. Fletcher's address, and a telegram was immediately sent to Grand Forks. The railroad company wired Conductor Veseley to meet the Omaha passenger and take the remains to St. Paul. Mr. Veseley had been Abner's roommate and boon companion at Sheridan.

Conductor Veseley arrived in St. Paul with the remains at 10:30 Friday evening, and was met by Ernest Fletcher, who transferred the body to the Great Northern train for Crookston, arriving in Red Lake Falls Saturday morning.

Deceased is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar E. Fletcher, four sisters, Mrs. W. A. McIntyre of Langdon, N. D., and Misses Florence, Lulu and Mildred Fletcher, and two brothers, Dr. F. F. Fletcher of Grand Forks and Ernest E. Fletcher of Langdon, N. D. All of the members of the family were at home for the funeral. Two cousins of the deceased, Mrs. Harry Jones and Wilbur Fletcher of Cohasset, were also here for the funeral. Miss Lulu Fletcher has returned to Moose Lake, where she teaches, but will resign her position and spend the summer at home. Miss Florence Fletcher, who teaches in Minneapolis, and Ernest Fletcher are spending a few days at home. The other relatives have returned to their homes.

HICKS AT COLLEGE, SENIOR CLASS PLAY

Play With Rollicking College Atmosphere—You'll Laugh All the Time.

At Bijou Theatre Friday and Saturday Evenings, Next Week.

The senior class play, Hicks at College, is to be given next week and it is going to be more fun than anything that has happened in Red Lake Falls for a long time.

Hicks at College was presented by the class of 1909 of the University of Minnesota and was written by members of the class. The play is so popular that it has been put on this year by many high schools throughout the middle west and especially in Minnesota. Thief River Falls and East Grand Forks have put it on to crowded houses who have gone away well pleased.

Hicks, a breakfast food millionaire, attempts to induce the most popular senior, Tom Horton, at Northern University to become advertising manager for "Braino." Failing in this, he tries to get him by intrigue. This intrigue brings about many ridiculous situations which are bound to keep an audience in good nature through the entire ninety minutes through which it runs.

The play will be put on Friday and Saturday evening, May 13 and 14, at the Bijou theatre. The play is to be given two evenings because the building is so small that all who wish to see the play could not be accommodated if the play were given only once. There will be a matinee for school children only at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon, May 13. Tickets will be 25 cents; 10 cents for the children's matinee.

KINGHEAD IN WHEAT

Wheat Containing Kinghead Seed Will Suffer Much in Grade.

According to information sent out from Duluth, the large increase in the amount of wheat containing Kinghead seed that was raised on the past crops, has resulted in more of this class of grain being received at Duluth than the market can properly handle. Considerable of it has been grading 1 Nor. with dockage presumably sufficient to cover the removal of the Kinghead seed. The seed can not be taken out by elevator machinery, and as a result the contract grade is more or less affected. The terminal elevators can, under the most favorable circumstances, handle a very small percentage of this class of grain, and if they take all that is tendered on purchases to arrive on the next crop as they were compelled to do the past season, it would mean that they would have considerable stocks on hand that would practially be unsalable. It has therefore been decided by the buyers representing the various elevator interests at Duluth that on and after August 1, 1910, any purchase of wheat to arrive which they make shall be understood as meaning wheat free from Kingheads, even though the cars should grade 1 Nor. All wheat containing Kingheads will be bought on its merits regardless of the state grade or dockage, but under no circumstances are any of the cars to be applied on sales that have been made to arrive by the various receivers.

Elevator agents should direct the attention of farmers to the fact that on the coming crop the wheat containing Kingheads will suffer very greatly in grade, probably losing as much as two or three grades from what the wheat should be entitled to. The fact of the matter is, that no machinery has ever been devised that will separate the Kingheads from the wheat, and really the only successful method is to pull them in the field while growing the same as mustard and other foul weeds are eradicated.

Bids Wanted.

Bids will be received by the city council of the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, at its next regular meeting to be held May 12th, 1910, for the removal of all rubbish and the taking down and removal of what is known as the Auditor's vault from Lots 9, 10, 11 and 12 of Block 3, Original Townsite of Red Lake Falls (old court house property) and the filling up of the cellar and the leveling off of the above described property in a good workmanlike manner.

Right is reserved to reject any or all bids.

By order of the city council of the city of Red Lake Falls.

JOSEPH PERRAULT,
City Clerk.

The United States government is the greatest builder in the country. It owns buildings worth more than $200,000,000, and spends $20,000,000 a year on new ones. St. Paul. — Hennepin county will have 111 delegates in the democratic state convention, Ramsey county 78 and St. Louis county 39. The apportionment of delegates has not been determined, but the plan presented to the democratic state central committee by John King, state librarian, met with the approval of the members. BIG FIRE AT STILLWATER.

Flames Warded From State Prison by Efforts of Two Inmates.

Stillwater. — Serving a life sentence for murder, a convict in the Stillwater prison known as "Sinbad, the Sailor," put away all thoughts of escape during the excitement of the fire near the prison and labored heroically to save the prison from the flames.

That the prison was not destroyed is said to be due almost entirely to his efforts and those of another of the convicts whose name was not given out.

Warden Wolfer's house was saved, only suffering a severe scorching of the paint, and that the entire north end of Stillwater is not in ruins is a miracle. The fire-swept district covers an area of three squares. The estimated total loss of $65,000 is only partially covered by insurance.

Of unknown origin, the fire started at 2 p. m. in the warehouse of the Northwest Thresher company. The flames spread rapidly, fanned by a strong east wind. At 5 o'clock the fire was quenched and that more damage was not accomplished was due to the efforts of the Stillwater fire department, augmented by hundreds of volunteers.

E. Johnson, chief special officer of the interior department. The order was issued as the result of research among the old Indian treaties by W. G. Calderwood, secretary of the Minnesota Prohibition committee.

The order affects all of Becker, Hubbard and Mahnomen counties, and parts of Beltrami, Cass, Clay, Clearwater, Crow Wing, Itasca, Norman, Ottertail and Wadena counties.

May Close All Saloons.

Every saloon in the Indian country in Minnesota may be closed as the result of a clash between John W. Carl, of Mahnomen, Indian attorney, and W. E. Johnson, special Indian agent for the government. Mr. Carl says he will accomplish his purpose if he has to appeal to the department of justice. He demands the closing of every saloon in the territory covered by the treaty of 1855, which includes Brainerd, Wadena, Bemidji, Staples and several others of importance.

The New Minnesota "Dry" Spot.

Mr. Johnson has so far refused to take any action in reference to these cities on the grounds that it was not the intention of the treaty to include them. He argued that the intention of the treaty is to prohibit the sale of liquor to Indians, and inasmuch as the saloons in these cities do not sell to the red men he will not molest them.

Mr. Johnson has been inclined to doubt the sincerity of Mr. Carl's intention and charges that he is the agent of the bootleggers and the breweries, and that he has a specific purpose in his agitation. He declares that it is the plan to have all the saloons in northern Minnesota close, which will result in such a protest that congress will annul the treaty.

Mine Superintendent and Unknown Hero Descend Into Mine to Ascertain Conditions and Nearly Perish.

Birmingham, Ala., April 21.—Not one of the forty-one men imprisoned last night in the Mulga mine of the Birmingham Iron & Coal Co., is alive.

This was the word brought to the surface this morning to the waiting, weeping families of the victims, when, unconscious from the deadly gases of the shaft, Superintendent Johns of the mine and a man named Bonds, an unknown, who risked his life for those already perished, were drawn up to the fresh air.

The condition of the rescuers told the story long before the men had been revived. When Johns and Bonds, after heroic treatment, finally regained consciousness, they confirmed the gravest anticipations of the people who for hours waited at the mouth of the shaft to hear word of their loved ones.

"Dead, all dead," was the stammering sentence of the superintendent as he began to recover from the effects poisonous gases.

When the former president reached the station platform he greeted M. Jusserand, and other friends effusively.

These formalities were over in a few minutes and Mr. Roosevelt, Kermit Roosevelt, with Bacon and Jusserand, entered an automobile and were driven rapidly to the American ambassador's residence, where Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Ethel were awaiting them. During the passage of their car through the streets Mr. Roosevelt was frequently cheered and several hundred persons who were awaiting in front of embassy greeted him with much enthusiasm.

TESTIMONY IS DAMAGING

NURSE'S EVIDENCE GOES AGAINST ALLEGED MURDERER

Attorney for Defense Defeated in Bitter Fight to Exclude Testimony Not Touching Case.

Kansas City, April 20.—It was only when asked three times by Dr. C. T. Twyman and once by Mrs. Hyde to stop the flow of blood from James Moss Hunton that Dr. B. C. Hyde closed the wound in the patient's arm, testified Miss Pearl Keller, a nurse in the Hyde murder trial today. A few minutes after Hunton's death, she further said, Dr. Hyde importuned his wife to use her mother's influence in having him made an administrator of Colonel Swope's estate to succeed Hunton. She refused.

Atty. John Lucas, representing Dr. B. C. Hyde today renewed his fight to prevent the state from introducing any testimony in the trial of his client for the alleged murder of Col. Thomas H. Swope that does not bear directly upon the death of the late millionaire. The trial was brought to an abrupt end yesterday afternoon in the midst of the testimony of Miss Pearl Keller, a nurse, in order that the defense might argue the point. The court has held thus far that the state has the right to introduce any testimony regarding the mystery it may desire in order to prove the motive.

Following the overruling of the defense's objection to the testimony not touching directly upon the death of Col. Thomas H. Swope being introduced into the Hyde murder trial, Miss Pearl Keller, a nurse, resumed the witness stand this morning.

CHEAP GRAIN IS CAUSE

Close Observers Say Meat Prices Will Decline—Cheering News for All Save the Farmer—Large Amount of Grain.

New York, April 19.—Close observers of the food product's markets today expressed the belief in a probable speedy setting in of an era of low prices for food stuffs.

One provision man today declared that the tendency of prices is just now unmistakable downward and that the people may look for a decrease in the retail prices of beef and pork in a short time. The plentitude of grain he argued, has compelled the farmer to feed it to his cattle, which are waxing fat, and which must be put on the market.

Other provision men expressed similar views based largely on the decline in the grain markets and the predictions of bountiful crops both here and abroad.

Mrs. How was at the farm packing up some goods which belonged to her husband and which she was going to ship to Canada where her husband is now living and where she expects to join him this week.

Thursday the two were alone together and Mrs. How states that Nelson proposed that she desert her husband and run away with him. She rejected his advances and he threatened violence. She went into a room and shut the door and Nelson called through the door that he had a knife and that he was coming into the room and if she did not yield to him he would kill her.

She fired through the door and the bullet entered the man's body causing the wound to which he succumbed Saturday.

I should always feel that dear Mr. Rushmore was in the room. It [illegible] to think of it! [illegible] and middle [illegible] that many [illegible] marry again. Mark [illegible] Margaret, your friend is [illegible] to console herself before long, [illegible] the one. It will be an [illegible]. My dear, I am quite positive [illegible]."

[illegible] sat down that evening the yacht had passed Otranto and [illegible] her course had been [illegible] for Cape Spartivento and the Straits of Messina, [illegible] in 24 hours as much as [illegible] Italian mail steamers do in [illegible] as much again as [illegible] could have done at her [illegible] speed. As Mr. Van Torp had [illegible], his engines had "warmed [illegible]" beating their own [illegible]. The breeze made by the vessel's [illegible] stronger than a woman could [illegible] with any regard to her appearance, but as the weather continued to be calm it was from dead [illegible] and there was plenty of shelter on the promenade deck abaft the [illegible], on condition of not going [illegible] the rail.

After dinner Kralinsky and Mrs. Rushmore walked a little, as on the [illegible] evening, and Lady Maud sat with Margaret and Van Torp. But before the two walkers went off to sit down in the quiet corner they had found yesterday, Lady Maud rose, went half way aft, and deliberately placed herself where they were obliged to pass close to her at each turn, standing and leaning against the bright white side of the engine skylight, which was as high as the wheelhouse itself, and broke in aft, where the big ventilating fans were situated, making a square corner inward.

She stood there, and as it was not very dark in the clear starlight, Kralinsky saw in passing that she followed his face with her eyes, turning her head to look at him when he was coming towards her, and turning it very slowly back again as he came near and went by. It was impossible to convey more clearly an invitation to get rid of his companion and join her, and he was the last man in the world to misunderstand it.

But Mrs. Rushmore saw it too, and as she considered him a lion, and therefore entitled to have his own way, she made it easy for him.

"My dear count," she said blandly, after passing Lady Maud twice, "I have really had enough now, and if you will promise to finish your walk alone, I think I will go and sit with the others."

He left her with Margaret and Van Torp and went back to Lady Maud, who moved as he came up to her, made two steps beside him, and then suddenly slipped into the recess where the fanhouse joined the engine skylight. She stood still, and he instantly ranged himself beside her. They were quite out of sight of the others, and of the bridge, and even if it had been daylight they could not have been seen except by some one coming from aft.

"I want to speak to you," she said, in a low, steady voice. "Please listen quite quietly, for some of them may begin to walk again."

Kralinsky bent his head twice, and then inclined it towards her, to hear better what she was going to say.

"It has pleased you to keep up this comedy for 24 hours," she began.

He made a slight movement, which was natural under the circumstances.

"I do not understand," he said, in his oily voice. "What comedy? I really have no—"

"Don't go on," she answered, interrupting him sharply. "Listen to what I am going to tell you, and then decide what you will do. I don't think your decision will make very much difference to me, but it will make a difference to the world and to yourself. I saw you from a window when you brought Mr. Van Torp to the hotel in Bayreuth, and I recognized you at once. Since this afternoon I have no doubt left."

"I never saw you till last night," said Kralinsky, with some little surprise in his tone, and with perfect assurance.

"Do you really think you can deceive me any longer?" she asked. "I told you this afternoon that if you could come back from the dead, and know the truth, we should probably forgive each other, though we had many differences. Shall we?" She paused a moment, and by his quick change of position she saw that he was much moved. "I don't mean that we should ever go back to the old life, for we were not suited to each other from the first, you and I. You wanted to marry me because I was pretty and smart, and I married you because I wanted to be married, and you were better looking than most men, and seemed to have what I thought was necessary—fortune and a decent position. No, don't interrupt me. We soon found out that we did not care for each other. You went your way, and I went mine. I don't mean to reproach you, for when I say you were beginning to be tired of me I did nothing to keep you. I myself was tired of it already. But whatever you may have thought, I was a faithful wife. Mr. Van Torp had given me a great deal of money for my charity, and does still. I can account for it. I never used a penny of it for myself, and never shall; and he never was, and never will be, any more than a trusted friend. I don't know why you chose to disappear when the man who had your pocketbook was killed and you were said to be dead. It's not my business, and if you choose to go on living under another name, now that you are rich again, I shall not betray you, and few people will recognize you, at least in England, so long as you wear that beard. But you had it when we were married, and I knew you at once, and when I heard you were to be of the party here, I made up my mind at once that I would accept the invitation and come too, and speak to you as I'm speaking now. When I believed you were dead I forgave you everything, though I was glad you were gone; frankly, I did not wish you alive again, but since you are, God forbid that I should wish you dead. You owe me two things in exchange for my forgiveness: First, yours, if I treated you ungenerously or unkindly; and, secondly, you ought to take back every word you ever said to me about Mr. Van Torp, for there was not a shadow of truth in what you thought. Will you do that? I ask nothing else."

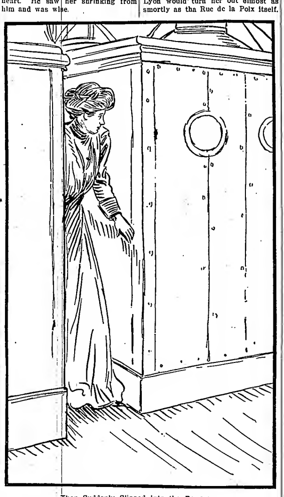
"Indeed I will, my dear Maud," said Count Kralinsky, in a voice full of emotion.

Lady Maud drew a long breath, that trembled a little as it left her heated lips again. She had done what she believed most firmly to be right, and it had not been easy. She had not been surprised by his patient silence while she had been talking; for she had felt that it was hers to speak and his to listen.

"Thank you," she said now. "I shall never go back to what I have said, and neither of us need ever allude to old times again during this trip. It will not last long, for I shall probably go home by land from the first port we touch, and it is not likely that we shall ever meet again. If we do, I shall behave as if you were Count Kralinsky, whom I have met abroad, neither more nor less. I suppose you will have conscience enough not to marry. Perhaps, if I thought another woman's happiness depended on it, I would consent to divorce you, but you shall never divorce me."

"No power could make me wish to," Kralinsky answered, still deeply moved. "I was mad in those days, Maud; I was beside myself, between my debts and my entanglements with women not fit to touch your shoes. I've seen it all since. That is the chief reason why I chose to disappear from society when I had the chance, and become some one else! I swear to you, on my mother's soul in heaven, that I thought of nothing but that—to set you free and begin life over again as another man. No thought of marrying has ever crossed my mind! Do you think I could be as bad as that? But I'm not defending myself—how could I? All the right is on your side, and all the wrong on mine. And now—I would give heaven and earth to undo it all and to come back to you!"

Lady Maud drew as far as she could into the corner where the fanhouse joined the engine skylight. She had not expected this; it was too much repentance; it was too like a real attempt to win her again. He had not seen her for more than three months; she knew she was very beautiful; his fleeting passion had come to life again, as he had. But her old repulsion for him was ten times stronger than when they had parted, and she shrank back as far as she could, without speaking. From far below the noiseless engines sent a quick vibration up to the ironwork of the skylight. She felt it, but could hardly tell it from the beatings of her own heart. He saw her shrinking from him and was wise.



Then Suddenly Slipped Into the Recess.

"Don't be afraid of me!" he cried, in a low and pleading tone. "Not that! Oh, please not that! I will not come nearer; I will not put out my hand to touch yours, I swear it to you! But I love you as I never loved you before; I never knew how beautiful you were till I had lost you, and now that I have found you again you are a thousand times more beautiful than in my dreams! No, I ask nothing! I have no right to ask for what I have thrown away! You do not even pity me, I think! Why should you? You were free when you thought me dead, and I have come back to be a burden and a weight on your life. Forgive me, forgive me, my lost darling, for the sake of all that might have been, but don't fear me! Pity me, if you can, but don't be afraid of me! Say that you pity me a little, and I shall be satisfied, and grateful, too!"

Lady Maud was silent for a few seconds, while he stood turned towards her, his hands clasped in a dramatic gesture, as if still imploring her commiseration.

"I do pity you," she said at last, quite steadily, for just then she did not fear that he would try to touch even her hand. "I pity you, if you are really in love with me again. I pity you still more if this is a passing thing that has taken hold of you merely because you still think me handsome. But I will never take you back to be my husband again. Never. That is finished, for good and all."

"Ah, Maud, listen to me—"

But she had already slipped out of the corner and was walking slowly away from him, not towards the others, but aft, so that he might join her quietly before going back to them. He was a man of the world and understood her, and did what was expected of him. Almost as soon as he was beside her, she turned to go forward with her leisurely, careless grace.

"We've been standing a long time," she said, as if the conversation had been about the weather. "I want to sit down."

"I am in earnest," he said, very low.

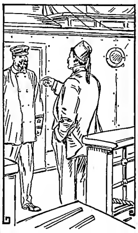
"So am I," answered Lady Maud.

They went on towards the wheelhouse side by side, without haste, and not very near together, like two ordinary acquaintances.

CHAPTER XIV.

While the Lancashire Lass was racing down to the Straits of Messina the Erinna was heading for the same point from the opposite direction, no longer dawdling along at half-speed, but going her full 16 knots, after coaling at Naples, and any navigator who knew the positions and respective speeds of the two yachts could have calculated with approximate precision the point at which they would probably sight each other.

Logothetti had given up the idea of taking Baraka to Paris, if he had ever really entertained it at all. He assured her that Naples was a great city, too, and that there was a first-class French dress-making establishment there, and that the Ville de Lyon would turn her out almost as smartly as the Rue de la Paix itself.



He Sent Another Man to Wait Till Midnight at the Office.

He took Baraka ashore and placed her for half a day in the hands of Mme. Anna, who undertook to do all that money could do in about a fortnight. He had the effrontery to say that Baraka was a niece of his from Constantinople, whose mother was on board the yacht, but had unfortunately sprained her ankle in falling down the companion during a gale, and could therefore not accompany her daughter on shore. The young lady, he said, spoke only Turkish. Mme. Anna, grave and magnificently calm under all circumstances, had a vague recollection of having seen the handsome oriental gentleman already with another niece, who spoke only French; but that was none of her business. When would the young lady try on the things? One any day Mme. Anna chose to name; but in the meantime her uncle would take her down to Sicily, as the weather was so wonderfully fine and it was still so hot. Mme. Anna therefore named a day, and promised, moreover, to see the best linen-drapers and seamstresses herself, and to provide the young lady with as complete an outfit as if she were going to be married. She should have all things visible and invisible in the shortest possible time. Logothetti, who considered himself a stranger, insisted on putting down a thousand franc note merely as a guarantee of good faith. The dressmaker protested almost furiously and took the money, still protesting. So that was settled, and Baraka was to be outwardly changed into a beautiful Feringhi lady without delay. To tell the truth, the establishment is really a smart one, and she was favorably impressed by the many pretty frocks and gowns that were tried on several pretty young women in order that she might make her choice.

Baraka would have liked a blue satin skirt with a yellow train and a bright green silk body, but in her travels she had noticed that the taste of Feringhi ladies was for very sober or gentle colors, compared with the fashionable standards of Samarkand, Tiflis, and Constantinople, and she meekly acquiesced to everything that Logothetti and Mme. Anna proposed, after putting their heads together. Logothetti seemed to know a great deal about it.

It was nearly dark when the naphtha launch took them out to the yacht, which lay under the mole where the big English and German passenger steamers and the men-of-war are moored.

Logothetti had at last received Margaret's telegram asking him to meet her at once. It had failed to reach him in Gibraltar, and had been telegraphed on thence to Naples, and when he read it he was considerably disturbed. He wrote a long message of explanations and excuses, and sent it to the prima donna at Bayreuth, tripling the number of words she had prepaid for his answer. But no reply came, for Margaret was herself at sea and nothing could reach her. He sent one of his own men from the yacht to spend the day at the telegraph office, with instructions for finding him if any message came. The man found him three times, and brought three telegrams; and each time as he tore open the little folded brown paper he felt more uncomfortable, but he was relieved to find each time that the message was only a business one from London or Paris, giving him the latest confidential news about a government loan in which he was largely interested. When he reached the yacht he sent another man to wait till midnight at the office.

The diva was angry, he thought; that was clear, and perhaps she had some right to be. The tone of her telegram had been peremptory in the extreme, and now that he had answered it after a delay of several days, she refused to take any notice of him. It was not possible that such a personage as she was should have left Bayreuth without leaving clear instructions for sending on any telegrams that might come after she left. At this time of year, as he knew, she was beset with offers of engagements to sing, and they had to be answered. From eight o'clock in the morning to midnight there were 16 hours, ample time for a retransmitted message to reach her anywhere in Europe and to be answered. Logothetti felt a sensation of deep relief when the man came aboard at a quarter-past midnight and reported himself empty handed; but he resolved to wait till the following evening before definitely leaving Naples for the ten days which must elapse before Baraka could try on her beautiful Feringhi clothes.

He told her anything he liked, and she believed him, or was indifferent; for the idea that she must be as well dressed as any European woman when she met the man she was seeking had appealed strongly to her, and the sight of the pretty things at Mme. Anna's had made her ashamed of her simple little ready-made serges and blouses. Logothetti assured her that Kralinsky was within easy reach, and showed no inclination to travel far. There was news of him in the telegrams received that day, the Greek said. Spies were about him and were watching him for her, and so far he had shown no inclination to admire any Feringhi beauty.

Baraka accepted all these inventions without doubting their veracity. In her eyes Logothetti was a great man, something like a king, and vastly more than a Tartar chieftain. He could send men to the ends of the earth if he chose. Now that he was sure of where Kralinsky was, he could no doubt have him seized secretly and brought to her, if she desired it earnestly of him. But she did not wish to see the man, free or a prisoner, till she had her beautiful new clothes. Then he should look upon her, and judge whether he had done well to despise her love, and to leave her to be done to death by her own people and her body left to the vulture that had waited so long on a jutting point of rock over her head three years ago.

It was a dreamy and sense-compelling life that she led on the yacht, surrounded with every luxury she had ever heard of, and constantly waited on by the only clever man she had ever really talked with, excepting the old Persian merchant in Stamboul. The vision of the golden-bearded giant who had left her to her fate after treating her with stony indifference was still before her, but the reality was nearer in the shape of a visible "greatman," who could do anything he chose, who caused her to be treated like a queen, and who was undeniably handsome.

She wondered whether he had a wife. Judging marriage from her point of view, there probably had been one put away in that beautiful house in Paris. He was an oriental, she told herself, and he would not parade his wife as the Feringhis did. But she was one, too, and she considered that it would be an insult to ask him about such things. Spiro knew, no doubt, but she could not demean herself to inquire of a servant. Perhaps Gula had found out already, for the girl had a way of finding out whatever she wanted to know, apparently by exploiting things to the second mate. Possibly Gula could be made to tell what she had learned without being directly questioned. But after all, Baraka decided that it did not matter, since she meant to marry the fair-beard as soon as she had her pretty clothes. Yet she became conscious that if he had not existed, she would think it very satisfactory to marry the great man who could do anything he liked, though if he had a wife already, as he probably had, she would refuse to be the second in his house. The Koran allowed a man four, it was said, but the idea was hateful to her, and moreover the Persian merchant's wife had told her that it was old fashioned to have more than one, mainly because living had grown so expensive.

Logothetti sat beside her for hours under the awnings, talking or not, as she chose, and always reading when she was silent, though he often looked up to see if she wanted anything. He told her when they left Naples that he would show her beautiful islands and other sights, and the great fire-mountains of the south, Etna and Stromboli, which she had heard of on her voyage to Marseilles, but had not seen because the steamer had passed them at night. The fire-mountain at Naples had been quiet, only sending out thin wreaths of smoke, which Baraka insisted came from fires made by shepherds.

"Moreover," she said, as they watched Vesuvius receding when they left Naples, "your mountains are not mountains, but ant-hills, and I do not care for them. But your sea has the colors of many sherbets, rose-leaf and violet, and lemon and orange, and sometimes even of pale yellow peach-sherbet, which is good. Let me always see the sea till the fine dresses are ready to be tried on."

"This sea," answered Logothetti, "is always most beautiful near land and amongst islands, and the big fire-mountain of Sicily looks as tall as Kashek, because it rises from the water's edge to the sky."

"Then take me to it, and I will tell you, for my eyes have looked on the Altai, and I wish to see a real mountain again. After that we will go back and get the fine dresses. Will Gula know how to fasten the fine dresses at the back, do you think?"

"You shall have a woman who does, and who can talk with Gula, and the two will fasten the fine dresses for you." Logothetti spoke with becoming gravity.

"Yes," Baraka answered. "Spend money for me, that I may be good to see. Also, I wish to have many servants. My father has a hundred, perhaps a thousand, but now I have only two, Gula and Spiro. The man I seek will think I am poor, and that will be a shame. While I was searching for him, it was different; and besides, you are teaching me how the rich Franks live in their world. It is not like ours. You know, for you are more like us, though you are a king here."

She spoke slowly and lazily, pausing between her phrases, and turning her eyes to him now and then without moving her head; and her talk amused him much more than that of European women, though it was so very simple, like that of a gifted child brought suddenly to a new country, or to see a fairy pantomime.

"Tell me," he said after a time, "if it were the portion of Kralinsky to be gathered to his fathers before you saw him, what would you do?"

Baraka now turned not only her eyes to him but her face.

"Why do you ask me this? Is it because he is dead, and you are afraid to tell me?"

GERMANY AND CANADIAN WHEAT

LOOKS TO THE CANADIAN WEST FOR HER SUPPLY.

A dispatch from Winnipeg, Manitoba, dated March 18, 1910 says: That Germany is "anxious to secure a share of Canadian wheat to supply her imports of that cereal." The recent adjustment of the trade relations with Germany has made it possible to carry on a Canadian-German trade with much fewer restrictions than in the past, and considerable development of trade between the two Countries is now certain. The great men of the United States are alive to the Wheat situation in this Country now, and there is consequently the deepest interest in every feature that will tend to increase and conserve the wheat supply. With its present 650,000,000 bushel production of wheat and all efforts to increase it almost unavailing, and the rapidly growing consumption of its increasing population, there is certainly the greatest reason for the anxiety as to where the wheat is to come from that will feed the nation. The United States will be forced as Germany is to look to the Wheatfields of Canada. One province alone raised last year one-eighth as much as the entire production of the United States, and but a twelfth of the wheat area has yet been touched. The Americans who have gone to Canada, are to-day reaping the benefit of the demand for Canadian wheat and they will continue to join in the benefits thus reached for a great many years. Splendid yields are reported from the farms of that Country, and from land that the Government gives away in 160 acre blocks, and from other lands that have been purchased at from $12 to $15 an acre. John Munter, near Eyebrow, Saskatchewan, a former resident of Minnesota says:

"Last fall got over 30 bushels of wheat to the acre and had 30 acres of it; also 20 acres spring breaking on which I had flax of which I got almost 20 bushels per acre. Had 20 acres in oats and got 70 bushels per acre and 500 bushels potatoes on one and three quarter acre, and can therefore safely say that I had a fine crop and am well satisfied with my homestead."

He is considered but a small farmer, but he will be one of the big farmers, some of these days. There are many others, hundreds of others, whose yields were beyond this, and whose average under crop was vastly greater. The story of the experience of American farmers in the Canadian West is a long one. The time to go, would appear to be now, when splendid selections may be made, and where land can be purchased at prices that will be doubled in a couple of years.

Something Stronger Than Wind.

Senator Depew, apropos of March winds, said, at a dinner in Washington:

"An old-fashioned fellow, one year when Easter came in March, paid too many Easter calls and drank too many cups of eggnogg, and, alas, was quite overcome.

"As the old-fashioned fellow lurched, in the late afternoon, toward home, a little girl watched him from her window, curiously.

"'Oh, mamma,' she said, 'come and look at Mr. Stuyvesant. Isn't the wind blowing him about!'"

Care of Horse's Feet.

If the horse already has defective feet keep them carefully trimmed and shod if necessary. The soft hoof should be shod and reshod every six or eight weeks in winter where the ground is frozen and at all times of the year where the roads are rocked or graveled. By keeping the horse with poor feet properly shod it will do good service without loss of time. But it is best to breed for good feet.

His Way of Doing It.

"I met young Faker on the street some time ago and he told me he was making money very fast."

"He made it too fast."

"How was that?"

"Went to the penitentiary for counterfeiting."

The Spartan Son.

"Come home with the moving picture or in it," she commanded him.

Herewith he rushed to the fray.

MISCHIEF MAKER

A Surprise in Brooklyn.

An adult's food that can save a baby proves itself to be nourishing and easily digested and good for big and little folks. A Brooklyn man says:

"When baby was about eleven months old he began to grow thin and pale. This was, at first, attributed to the heat and the fact that his teeth were coming, but, in reality, the poor little thing was starving, his mother's milk not being sufficient nourishment.

"One day after he had cried bitterly for an hour, I suggested that my wife try him on Grape-Nuts. She soaked two teaspoonfuls in a saucer with a little sugar and warm milk. This baby ate so ravenously that she fixed a second which he likewise finished.

"It was not many days before he forgot all about being nursed, and has since lived almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. Today the boy is strong and robust, and as cute a mischief-maker as a thirteen months old baby is expected to be.

"We have put before him other foods, but he will have none of them, evidently preferring to stick to that which did him so much good—his old friend Grape-Nuts.

"Use this letter any way you wish, for my wife and I can never praise Grape-Nuts enough after the brightness it has brought to our household."

Grape-Nuts is not made for a baby food, but experience with thousands of babies shows it to be among the best, if not entirely the best in use. Being a scientific preparation of Nature's grains, it is equally effective as a body and brain builder for grown-ups.

Strange Action of Memory

Scenes of Other Days, Thought Forgotten, Are Suddenly Flashed Into the Mind.

Often suggestions out of all keeping with the surroundings come, and it may be asked, "What made you think of that?" Frequently we are positive that no conscious train of thought has brought up the idea. These memories out of all rhyme and reason with our atmosphere and conscious occupation, pop into the mind and surprise us with their incongruity. Are these spontaneously originated as they seem to be, or have we merely forgotten the connecting train of ideas, as is often contended? The author but recently, while looking at some dill pickles, had flash upon his mind the image of a Southern California beach and an incident associated with the scene. The memory came so suddenly and the connecting link was sought for so immediately that a dropping out of a segment of consciousness is altogether improbable, yet he felt that there was a connection somewhere, if it could but be found. And it was found after a little thought. Where the brine on the pickles had dried, there were left fine, white salt crystals just as he had seen on kelp and sea mosses that he had gathered on that beach. The memory in the stream of consciousness was spontaneous, and yet we see how it may come under our law, at least in its physiological version.—From the Mental Man.

A Fortunate Mishap.

In a certain New England town they manufacture a well-known kind of towel, most efficient for drying purposes. How that towel first happened to be made in the form which has proved so profitable to its makers is the subject of an amusing legend. It savors strongly of belonging to the "too good to be true" genus of anecdotes, and is as follows:

Once the machinery in the towel factory, busily engaged in turning out a very conventional brand of towel, suddenly went wrong and began, practically, to go backward. There was much excitement. Eventually the machinery was chastised and set to rights again.

But—it was discovered that the towels turned out during that interval of mechanical anarchy were of a texture quite unrivaled for use as bath towels. At once the machinery was set going backward again, and has been traveling in that direction ever since, to the great delight of the stockholders in the towel company.

All Off.

The Heiress—Have you seen papa?

The Duke—Yes. It's all off.

The Heiress—You don't mean to say that he refused to give his consent?

The Duke—Oh, no. He said he'd give his consent—but not another cent.—Stray Stories.

Does Not Stimulate

Ayer's Sarsaparilla does not stimulate. It does not make you feel better one day, then as bad as ever the next. It is not a strong drink. No reaction after you stop using it. There is not a drop of alcohol in it. You have the steady, even gain that comes from a strong tonic and alterative. We wish you would ask your doctor about this. He knows. Trust him. Do as he says. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

What are Ayer's Pills? Liver Pills. How long have they been sold? Nearly sixty years. Do doctors recommend them? Ask your own doctor and find out.

What's the use of a tariff commission when we have "the best tariff law ever passed"?

The Northwestern Minnesota Editorial association will hold its summer meeting at Walker on June 3-5.

Mark Twain is dead, but Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn will live for all time in the hearts of American boyhood.

Aldrich and Hale announce their retirement from the senate because of ill health. Jim Tawney's health is expected to hold out until after election.

The only thing to regret in Gov. Hughes' appointment to the supreme bench, says the Northfield News, is that it deprives the nation of available presidential timber, which before long it may want to use.

Senator Nelson's position as chairman of the Ballinger investigating committee is peculiarly delicate. The people of Minnesota believe Ballinger is guilty, and if the Senator decides he isn't there will be a loud complaint.

A. C. Weiss, editor of the Duluth Herald, has been honored by being elected a director of the Associated Press, the greatest news gathering institution of the country. Mr. Weiss is exceedingly popular with the newspaper boys of Minnesota, and the signal honor conferred upon him will bring hearty and generous congratulations.

The Democrats of Indiana were wise in nominating John W. Kern, late candidate for vice president, for United States senator. The Democrats can no more afford to stand for Taggart and Tammany than can the Repulicans longer bear the odium of Aldrich and Cannon. The American people are demanding a higher order of statesmanship.

Julius Schmahl, secretary of state, says it is imperative that the Republicans should demand a revision of the Aldrich bill to prevent the country from going Democratic. Julius has had his ear to the ground recently, since not long ago he thought the Aldrich bill all right, and insisted that ere long Jim Tawney would be the only Minnesota congressman who would not be apologizing for his vote.

The following bit of sarcasm from the pen of Elmer Adams will create a smile a state wide: "The chairman of the state central committee is generally looked upon as a leader of the party in the state and Col. Brown is now filling that role. His wide experience with public affairs, first as assistant doorkeeper of the senate, and later as clerk to the lieutenant governor, equips him well for leader of the Republican party at this particular time."

Three congressional elections to fill vacancies, have been held since the passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. Here is the result:

Feb. 1, 1910—Sixth Missouri district, C. C. Atkinson, Democrat, elected; plurality of De Armond of 1,190 increased to 3,778.

April 19, 1910—Thirty-second New York district, J. S. Havens, Democrat, plurality 5,831; Republican plurality 1908, 10,167.

A town may by a spurt or two acquire a reputation as a live town, and all that goes with it, but it is a sure shot that one little season of hustle will not necessarily suffice for all time to come, observes Sam Haislet's Lankin Reporter. It is necessary for a town that wants to attract trade and hold it, to keep wide awake every minute of the time and not let anything remain undone that will look to the betterment of the conditions, and unless it does this there will come a reckoning day, and the reputation will go abroad that greed has usurped enterprise and hustle. Business men who put only their personal feeling and interest ahead of all else, soon kill a town, and there must be some sacrifice on the part of all if things are to be kept moving.

SENATOR NELSON'S INSURGENCY.

"I am now fast getting to be an old man. I have seen the great corporations and the trusts and combinations grow in this country at a rapid and well-nigh irresistible pace, and they will grow faster and faster until we shall be absolutely helpless unless we adhere faithfully to the provisions of the anti-trust law. The pending railroad regulation bill will give the railroad companies immunity from the anti-trust law and will confer on them unlimited power to effect mergers. I for one can never consent to such legislation."

The Duluth Labor World then comments that in what was probably the most remarkable speech in his career, United States Senator Knut Nelson of Minnesota thus spoke of the Taft-Wickersham railroad regulation bill. That such an attack should be made by a Republican senator upon a bill which the president has declared to represent true Republican policy and doctrine, and support of which Attorney Wickersham and all the reactionaries have declared is a test of puur Repubicanism, indicates how far apart the stalwarts and progressives really are.

The Minnesota senator was listened to with marked attention. The reactionaries were so amazed they forgot to even make interruptions, as is customary when progressive Republicans have the floor. It was so obvious that Senator Nelson was deeply impressed with forebodings of disaster to the nation in the event of the passage of such bills as the one under consideration, that the speech was strangely effective. The occupants of the galleries were silent and attentive, and all eyes were centered upon the picturesque Minnesotan.

Senator Nelson related how the western section of the country had suffered under railroad oppression and the long fight that had been made, until the legislation of 1906 was forced by public sentiment. He talked of the anti-trust law as the shield which had been created to protect the public against further oppression by the trusts and combinations of all sorts, and then proceeded to show how the pending bill purposes to destroy that protection and to give the railroads unrestricted power to resume their oppressive methods.

"If we are not wise," warned the Minnesota senator, "if we are not wiser than the French were in the days of Louis XV and Louis XVI and allow these trusts and monopolies to grow and go on untrammeled, the day will come—it may not be in our day, but the day will come—when the American people will resort to revolution as the people of France had to do, but it will be a peaceful revolution—an American revolution—not as violent and repulsive as the French, but as thorough and effective in its results."

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Rheumatism is a specific blood fermentation, a souring of the circulation from an excess of uric acid accumulating in the blood stream. This uratic impurity comes usually as a result of constipation, weak kidneys, indigestion and stomach disturbances. These systemic irregularities may not be of marked severity or of long duration, but each has a direct effect on the eliminative members of the body, which prevents the proper removal of the waste products. This refuse remains in the stomach and bowels, and souring forms uric acid, which the blood quickly absorbs.

Rheumatism is usually manifested in the joints and muscles. It is here its sharpest twinges of pain are felt, and stiffening of ligaments and tendons first commence. The pain of Rheumatism is caused by the contact of the sensory nerves with the gritty, acrid formation which uric acid causes to accumulate in the corpuscles of the blood about the joints. The stiffening of muscles and joints is usually gradual. Constantly the blood deposits the uric acid into the joints, and slowly the natural fluids are dried up and destroyed. Then Rheumatism becomes chronic and serious. Rheumatism is sometimes inherited, for like all blood diseases it can be transmitted to offspring. This explains why some persons are afflicted with the disease, and suffer its pains, who have otherwise been perfectly healthy.

S.S.S. cures Rheumatism and cures it permanently. It goes into the circulation, and removes the uric acid, purifies the blood, and in this way destroys the cause. S.S.S. changes the blood from a sour, acid-steeped stream to a rich, healthy fluid, which quiets the excited nerves, eases the throbbing muscles and painful joints, and filters out of the circulation the irritating matter which causes every painful symptom of the disease. When the blood has been purified and enriched by S.S.S., it nourishes the different members that have been weakened and starved because of imperfect blood. Book on Rheumatism and any medical advice free to all who write.

RHEUMATISM FORTY YEARS.

I suffered with lumbago for a long time, and speaking of it to a friend one day he told me to try S.S.S. I did so, and soon found it was helping me. I had rheumatism for more than forty years, having contracted it in the army, but S.S.S cured me sound and well, and have had no return of the trouble. I think S.S.S. has no equal for curing rheumatism.

The combination has the approval of physicians because it is known to be truly beneficial, and because it has given satisfaction to the millions of well-informed families who have used it for many years past.

HIS HANDS CRACKED OPEN

"I am a man seventy years old. My hands were very sore and cracked open on the insides for over a year with large sores. They would crack open and bleed, itch, burn and ache so that I could not sleep and could do but little work. They were so bad that I could not dress myself in the morning. They would bleed and the blood dropped on the floor. I called on two doctors, but they did me no good. I could get nothing to do any good till I got the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. About a year ago my daughter got a cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and in one week from the time I began to use them my hands were all healed up and they have not been a mite sore since. I would not be without the Cuticura Remedies.

"They also cured a bad sore on the hand of one of my neighbor's children, and they think very highly of the Cuticura Remedies. John W. Hasty, So. Effingham, N. H., Mar. 5 and Apr. 11, '09."

The Response Mechanical.

It is the custom in convents for the nuns to respond to a knock at the door with the words: "In the name of God," the phrase being equivalent in conventional parlance to our worldly "enter" or "come in."

In a convent in one of the western cities not long since the mother superior had a never-to-be-forgotten experience as a result of this custom. Some one in the outer world called the convent telephone number by mistake. The mother superior, roused from her meditations, picked up the receiver and responded, mechanically: "In the name of God."

"Madam!" called an irate masculine voice at the other end of the wire, "there is no occasion for you to swear at me, even if I have made a mistake in the number. Profane language is prohibited over the telephone!"

Watch Dogs of the Wilderness

By HERBERT VANDERHOOF

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

A LAND of infinite attraction and of infinite danger, a happy hunting-ground for the outlaw, a land of peril almost prohibitive to the peaceful-minded settler. That was western Canada 30 years ago. Now what country can point the pharisaical finger? The beauty, the fascination, the amazing possibilities, realized and yet to be, remain, and with them and of them are ordered and orderly living.

GUARD MOUNT AT A MOUNTED POLICE STATION

And the story of how this came about is the story of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

The mounted police! Don't you remember when you were a little chap, how you looked after the uniformed man on the glossy bay as he cantered through the park, and how you had no dearer dream of glory than to be like him? Even now, don't you feel the old, boyish thrill at the sight of a blue-coated, erect figure in the saddle at a crowded city crossing? If you do not, you are a "grown up"—saddest of labels—and will journey no more to the Never-Never-Never Land.

But for us "incurable children," the sight of the mounted policeman still catches at those old heart strings.

And if all this for the blue-coated, brass-buttoned horseman of the parks and boulevards, what of that other horseman, the one who rides alone with the stretch of endless prairies for his beat, with the criminal who holds a life at less than naught, his quarry? Surely even your dulled imagination, poor, to-be-pitied grown-ups, can catch fire faintly from the gleam of his scarlet coat.

Recruited chiefly from the younger sons of well-to-do, and even titled, English families, the Northwest Mounted Police has long been an institution where an English university man can work off the bubbling froth of a drop of gypsy blood before settling down as head of a county family and warden of his church, in the main a collection of young men for whom the Red Gods call too wildly, men with a dare-devil dash in their make-up, who leave England because they are impecunious, or because of a row with their families, or for sheer love of adventure. Come with me to Regina or Edmonton and you will hear stories of men who gave the recruiting officer the name of plain John Smith with something of a cynical smile—and it was bad form for the recruiting officer to notice this smile—men who had a habit of reaching for a monocle that wasn't there, of talking with the correct London pronunciation, and thrashing the fellow-trooper who called attention to this fact.

And any story you ever heard of the heir-presumptive in an English marquisate patrolling a 500-mile beat along the Arctic circle can be outmatched on the written records of the force, and in the memory of any officer. Fifteen years ago, Englishmen of Kipling's "gentleman ranker" type made up fully half of the force, and the other half was composed of wild Irishmen with all their country's love of a fight, old plainsmen and Indian fighters, the silent, steady-eyed, hard-riding men who gather on the frontier where the savage falls away before the ragged vanguard of civilization. And they have done their work so well that they are fast driving away their own excuse for being. The present northwest is no more what it was in 1874 than busy Winnipeg of to-day is the old Fort Garry to which the first troop of the "mounted" came 40 years ago. They have made western Canada what it is out of the lawless "territory"—an almost preposterous undertaking—one-quarter of the number of policemen in New York to govern a country 250,000 square miles larger than the United States!

In short, the mounted police have brought British law into western Canada, and firmly established it. The homesteader can go into any of the provinces and take out his claim, secure in the assurance that he can work his land undisturbed and harvest his crop uninjured. The homesteader is doing it by thousands, and the Last West is vanishing. The frontier—the last frontier of America—is being prosaically plowed by the practical man in blue overalls, who doesn't carry even a hunting knife, except to cut off his chew of Granger Twist.

The Indian has been reduced to his lowest terms. When men of the United States were building the Union Pacific across the plains, they were obliged to employ Uncle Sam's troops to guard the builders. If the ghosts of the dead who died violently in that first five-years' fight for the west were to line up along the right of way there would be almost enough of them to mark the miles.

On a 30-mile ride from the North Saskatchewan last fall, I met dozens of teams driven almost wholly by Indians and half-breeds. They were hauling the long logs that were to be driven twenty to thirty feet into the sands of the Saskatchewan to carry the false work of the Grand Trunk Pacific's steel bridge.

What a contrast! Instead of hindering, as was once the case, the northern Indians are helping to build the railroad. In the construction of the new government transcontinental line, the Indians are employed wherever they can be used, for the road is being rushed with all possible speed consistent with good work. The Indians are useful, also, to the pathfinders as guides; they know the forests of new Canada; they know the mountain fastnesses of the Peace river, and they know all the crooks and canyons of the Coast Range. In short, the red man of to-day is the trusted guide and faithful servant of the pathfinder. He hunts for the white man still, but quite differently from the way he used to hunt for the pioneers of old.

Thanks to the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, civilization's house is in order. To-day the thing of the past as well. Commissioner Perry's report states that the present arrangement ends on March 31, 1911. What after that?

Their work is done. The spirit of adventure which brought the men of 1874 to Red River Settlement will lure the hardiest on to still more distant fields. The scarlet tunic will be seen no longer, except in the pages of some historical source book; but the work of these silent, steady-eyed men will live forever, a record of tirelessness, fearlessness, unflinching courage and patience—the making of a new and great empire.

Change has already come to the mounted. The days when a scant 800 men were magistrates, doctors, coroners, explorers, surveyors, mining recorders, crown-timber agents, revenue and customs officers, telegraphers, scouts, riders, drivers, boatmen, canoemen, marines and sailors, dog-drivers, mail-carriers, couriers, public-health and animal-quarantine officers, prairie and forest-fire guardians, constables and soldiers for one-third of the British Empire are passing with every new mile of railroad. The border "wolfer," the cattle "rustler," the whisky trader, the fighting Indian, the whole band of swaggering ruffians who used to give zest to life in the "Territory" has largely passed away, or been crowded northward and westward toward the mining camps of Alaska and the Yukon. The reckless daring, the robust hardihood and picturesqueness of the force necessarily have somewhat changed in the development of the thoroughly civilized new northwest. Now the young fellows are getting their breaking-in among the settled districts, while the old stagers are stationed to the north and west where there is still the "frontier" on the edge of untraversed wilderness.

For the purposes of the new order of things, it is a thoroughly competent and efficient force, as it was in the days of the Territory. The members must pass a physical and mental examination which guarantees that. I came upon one of them in a moment of leisure studying a text-book on the common law, and he showed me some examination questions which implied that he must know how to conduct a cross-examination in open court so as to avoid what are known in the law as "leading questions." And any lawyer will be impressed when I say that every mounted policeman must know how to take a murdered man's dying declaration in such a manner that it can be presented as evidence in court. The reason for this is that he combines the functions of a policeman with those of a petty magistrate.

And this arrangement, whereby the same man could arrest you, and then try you himself, and finally put you in prison and be your keeper, was an ideal arrangement in the days when justice was a justice of the saddle, and all the more desirable for being summary. Although there are regular civil courts in the southern portion of Canada now, in the far north the duties of the mounted policeman are still as varied as those of Gilbert and Sullivan's Pooh-Bah. Primarily he keeps order. After that, he does everything that ought to be done, and that it isn't any one else's duty to do. And when some one else leaves his duty undone, the mounted policeman takes it up and finishes it. When the mail-carrier, who covers the North Country on dog sledges, reaches the most northern limit of his route, the mounted policeman takes over the bags, and goes 500 miles farther north with them. Not long ago a letter came to my hands from the Leffingwell polar expedition, in which the writer stated that he would take five dogs and a companion and travel 300 miles over the ice to mail the letter. When the letter reached its destination, the envelope bore the stamp of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, who evidently had received it at one of their posts in the arctic, and then had carried it by dog-train from the ice fields to railway connection.

It is all in the day's work to them. They will undertake anything, from minding the baby to hanging a man, with equal placidity, and put it through without flicking an eyelash. They have done their part to demonstrate that the one thing on this earth longer than the equator is the arm of English justice. Less than three years ago a mounted policeman tracked a Yukon murderer over 6,000 miles, caught up with him in Mexico, brought him back by way of Jamaica and Halifax, avoiding United States soil to prevent extradition complications, and hanged him within sight of the scene of his crime.

There has never been a lynching in Canada. Put that down to the credit of the mounted police, who administered justice so successfully that there was never any temptation for the work to be taken up by private enterprise. There was never any parallel for the experience of Bismarck, North Dakota, where it is said the first 24 graves were those of men who had died by violence. Toward the Indians, the mounted police maintained a tradition of stern vigilance which prevented anything like the costly Indian wars which the United States waged up to a few years ago. There was never in the history of Canada a train robbery such as still feature the headlines of United States newspapers from time to time. The desperado of every type had a healthy respect for the mounted policeman and preferred to conduct his little enterprises south of the border.

Canadians are particularly fond of telling the newly arrived American about the troop of American cavalry—a whole troop, mind you—who tenderly escorted a band of "bad Indians" bent on crossing the border, to the Canadian boundary line. They were met by a single mounted policeman.

"Are you ready for these Indians?" asked the American officer.

"Yes, sir," responded the policeman.

"They're a bad lot. Where is your escort stationed?"

The trooper smiled faintly under his mustache. "Why, Scott's having his horse shod, and I guess Murray's over getting a drink. They'll be along in a minute."

And when presently Scott and Murray came placidly on the scene, that troop of cavalry sat on their horses and watched the band of Indians they had so carefully guarded, depart over the yellow prairie under the charge of three men.

The American officer watched them dwindle to a dot across the level. Then his feelings found speech. "Well, I'm damned!" he said. And the troop rode away.

Again, old Pie-a-pot and several hundred of his tribe were making serious trouble along the railroad then under construction, and the mounted police promptly rode out to the Indian village with an order for the tribe to break camp and take the trail to the north, away from the line.

When the policeman explained the order to him, Pie-a-pot laughed and turned away. The other Indians jeered and discharged their guns in the air. The two policemen sat still.

"I will give you just 15 minutes to comply with the order," said the sergeant quietly.

When the 15 minutes were up, he dismounted, walked over to the chief's tepee, and with calm deliberation kicked out the key-pole of the lodge, bringing the whole structure down—poles, war bonnets, drying skins, kettles and all—in a miscellaneous heap.

Pie-a-pot did some deep and rapid thinking. A gesture to his young men would have sent a hundred bullets into each of the quiet, unruffled men who were systematically going through the camp, kicking out the key-pole of each tepee. But the Indians of the northwest had learned that sooner or later justice was done by the mounted police, and Pie-a-pot never made that gesture. He gave in, and in sullen silence the camp collected its scrambled effects and turned their ponies' heads north.

Not so fortunate was the attempt of Sergt. Colebrook to arrest a fugitive Cree Indian named Almighty Voice.

Almighty Voice had stolen a steer, and Sergt. Colebrook, with a half-breed companion, rode across the prairie to arrest him. The policeman instructed the half-breed to tell the Indian that they had come to arrest him, and that he must go with them. The Cree replied: "Tell him that if he advances I will kill him."

Instantly the half-breed covered the Indian with his rifle, but Colebrook promptly ordered him to desist, for Almighty Voice must be taken alive. Then he rode deliberately forward upon the muzzle of the Cree's rifle, and, sooner than submit to the shame of arrest, Almighty Voice fired. A year later, however, the Indian was surrounded in a pit where he had taken refuge. The police brought up their field guns and shelled the pit, killing Almighty Voice and thus avenging Sergt. Colebrook's death. The outcome of this incident served to prevent serious trouble with the Indians, who were all in a more or less sulky and unsettled mood at the time.

How greatly the Indians have come to respect the just and impartial administration of the law by the mounted police was shown when one of Mecasto's band escaped from the guardroom at Macleod after having been tried by the police on a charge of theft and convicted. When he returned to Mecasto's camp, the chief who had attended the trial at which the fugitive was convicted had been so deeply impressed by the impartial nature of the proceedings and by the fair administration of justice that he promptly delivered him up again at the fort gate to the officer in command.

Perhaps the greatest achievement which the police ever undertook was accomplished when they persuaded Sitting Bull and his band of between five and six thousand hostile Sioux to return and surrender to the United States authorities when they had taken refuge in Canada after the memorable massacre of Gen. Custer and his command. Commissioners from the United States had visited Sitting Bull and had negotiated with the chief for his return and surrender, to no avail. The police, however, by infinite tact and diplomacy, and because in their previous transactions they had won the confidence of the Indians of the northwest, at length succeeded in inducing Sitting Bull and his hostile braves to return peaceably to the United States, an exploit of which any body of men might be proud.

When the Boer war broke out, England called for the mounted police to help her there. One-third of them, practically the pick of the force, went out. Very few of them ever came back. Many were offered commissions, and some accepted. Wherever there is trouble, there the mounted police are the answer to the problem, as they have been in western Canada for 30 years, from the time of the Riel rebellion up to to-day.

The story of the mounted has its shadows. Men grew tired of the loneliness and deserted at times; men who had lost all—love, hope, ambition—quietly went away into the wilderness and blew out their brains. The life was unsettling; men could not leave it and take up clerical work or farming, because adventurers are not built that way.

But, shadows and all, the story of the Canadian mounted police is one of the most gorgeous tales since the days of the Spanish Main. And the spirit of the force is best embodied in that message found scrawled on the orders of a policeman who perished in a blizzard while making his way with dispatches to a distant post. In his last moments with numbed hand he had written: "Lost; horse dead. Am trying to push ahead. Have done my best."

Gathering Sea Fowl's Eggs

Perilous Work of Cliff Climbers on English Coast Begins with Spring.

The Yorkshire cliff climbers are making spring preparations for gathering the eggs of the myriads of sea fowl that build their nests in the dizzy precipices of the northeastern coast, according to the London Daily News.

At Bempton, a few miles from Bridlington, the favorite resort of these egg hunters, the chalk cliffs tower 400 feet above the sea. They are the home of thousands of gulls, cormorants, kittiwakes and other sea birds that have just begun to build their rough nests in the chalky crevices.

William Wilkinson, who has pursued this perilous calling for many years, is known locally as "the king of the egg hunters." He is a bluff, weather scarred man of the sea, with as much nerve and agility as are possessed by the most daring steeplejack.

Wilkinson wears an old helmet to protect his head from the pieces of rock dislodged by the rope by which he is suspended in midair. Around his body he buckles a kind of leather hammock, in which he is able to sit.

"Lower away, boys," he cries, as he swings himself over the brink in an almost horizontal position and presses each foot firmly against the chalk surface. Three of the men seize the rope and foot by foot the intrepid climber is lowered till his cheery voice is lost amid the fluttering sounds of the disturbed birds. He swings from nest to nest, putting each egg carefully in a bag slung over his shoulder. As soon as his bag is full he gives the "hoist up" signal on the guide rope and the men haul him up.

Wilkinson makes several descents and at the end of the day shares the spoil with his assistants, who sell the eggs for eating purposes to the inhabitants of the neighboring villages.

The KITCHEN CABINET

"ABILITY and nobility of character and purity of disposition depend in a great measure on what is eaten at the table."

Fish.

Fish would be more generally relished if more pains were taken in its cooking and serving.

Boiled fish put on a cold platter will come to the table too realistic for real enjoyment, as it is swimming in its native element.

Drain the fish first and serve on a folded napkin, which will absorb the rest of the water.

When the fish is baked, one may dispense with the napkin; but garnish with dainty sprays of parsley and bits of lemon.

Many kinds of fish may be cut in slices or filets, and when served show no unsightly waste portions.

Fish stock may be used as a basis for the sauce to be served with the fish.

In boiling fish, the quantity of water should be adjusted to the size of the fish, in no case should there be more than enough to cover the fish. The water should be at the boiling point, slightly acid with vinegar, and then the cooking should continue at the simmering point. The time of cooking depends upon the size of the fish, and is best determined by testing.

If the fish in its thickest part, separates easily from the bone, it should be removed at once. Too long cooking renders the flesh dry and tasteless.

In baking or boiling fish, a strip of cloth may lay in the dish to lift it out without breaking, if care is used.

Dainty Cheese Salad.

Chop nicely bleached tender celery fine and mix it with mayonnaise dressing. Line an ice cream dipper with cottage cheese, then fill up with the celery mixture, packing it in well. Screw out the cones on crisped lettuce leaves, arranged for individual serving.

Household Hints.

Cook figs in a sirup flavored with vanilla and use them for ices, cream or with nuts and whipped cream as a dessert.

Grape fruit is said to be a cure for the grip.

"NOW you look out and mind your ways!
And I must likewise do,
And keep a cheery corner where
The skies are always blue.
The A's and B's and E's and O's
Do work that's good and great,
But U and I can do the most
To keep this old world straight."
—Pauline Frances Camp.

Table Service.

The desirability of careful table service, even for the simplest meals, can not be overestimated. A simple meal placed on a well laid table is most attractive, and no amount of food however well prepared, will take the place of carelessness in table service.

If we would teach children table manners we can not expect results unless the family table is the school. A few pointers given to a child before the arrival of company usually ends in mortification for both the mother and child, so that the training should come daily. A well laid table and good table manners in children usually go together.

A little strife is frequently a good method to use when there are several children, offering some treat or privilege to the one who needs the least correction as to table manners, or neatness at the table.

The charm of a well laid table lies in the exact precision of its appointments. Silver should be placed uniformly. No hit or miss arrangement goes, as exactness is the watchword.

Knives should be placed at the right of the plate, edge of blade toward the plate, the fork at the left, two inches from the edge of the table. Most people would rather have the spoons at the right of the knife than at the top of the plate, as it gives more room there for the water glass at the top of the knife blade, the butter plate above the fork, or forks, and the napkin at the left of the forks.

Lay the napkin so that the open fold lies nearest the hand and may be picked up and unfolded with the one movement of the hand.

The center of the table should receive first attention after the laying of the linen and silver. A small centerpiece of embroidery or lace with a vase with a flower, or something green, growing, adds to the beauty of a table, and it has been tried and proven in many homes that such little touches in the poorest homes have had a far reaching influence in both manners and morals.

OPPORTUNITY TO DO GOOD

Combined Efforts on National Tuberculosis Sunday Will Have Excellent Results.

New York city had more arrests for violation of the anti-spitting ordinance in 1909 than any other city in the United States, having had 2,513, with [illegible] convictions, and $1,936.80 collected in fines. Baltimore comes next with 214 arrests and an equal number of convictions. Pittsburg is third in rank, with [illegible] Louis in fourth place. St. Louis, however, would have been in second place, if the sanitary police who enforce the law in that city had been at work in 1909. In 52 cities out of 80 the law was either not enforced at all or very poorly enforced. Of the remaining 28 cities, less than one-half of them contributed more than three-fourths of the arrests for spitting and of the fines collected. On account of the fact that National Tuberculosis Sunday will be observed on April 24, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis is calling the attention of clergymen in all parts of the country to the advisability of bringing before their congregations the necessity for better enforcement of the anti-spitting laws.

Where She Scored.

"One day a long time ago a number of children in our neighborhood were talking about the bad habits of their parents.

"'My father smokes 15 cigars a day,' said a little girl boastfully like.

"'My father swears something awful when supper is late,' said another.

"'My papa came home tight the other night,' remarked a third.

"It was my little sister's turn next.

"'You just ought to see my papa eat [illegible],' she said, and all the other little girls retired in confusion, tacitly admitting that sister had won the prize."—Cleveland Leader.

"Who," said Doctor Wiley, "would like to be in the boots of the cowboy in the barren sagebrush country who used to send in week after week, the same order to the storekeeper:

LUMP OF AMBERGRIS

Poor Man Never Suspected It Was of Any Great Value.

Merely to Satisfy Curiosity New Hampshire Man Takes It to State Chemist and Finds It Worth Many Thousand Dollars.

Manchester, N. H.—Adelard Levesque, a young house painter who resides with his wife and two small children in a modest tenement in the rear of 285 Chestnut street and who has struggled each day at his trade in order to provide comfortably for them, is the owner of a large chunk of ambergris valued at thousands of dollars, which he found floating in the St. Lawrence river in Canada more than three years ago.

It was not until a few days ago that he fully began to realize the value of his great find, when he was told that the state chemist at Concord, who had examined the specimen, had declared it, in his belief, to be ambergris.

For three years this gelatin-like mass, which is found in the intestines of the sperm whale and which is much sought by the perfumery manufacturers of the world, has lain around the little tenement of the Levesque family with no member of it giving it particular attention. Now and then Mr. Levesque would show it to friends, but none of them could tell him what it was.

A short time ago Mr. Levesque visited Boston, taking a sample of the precious mass along with him, and finally showed it to a doctor. The doctor offered him $125 for the piece that he had, which would probably weigh a pound. He refused the offer, for he then for the first time since its discovery began to think that it might be of great value.

Later Mr. Levesque went to Providence, R. I., called on some of the officials at the city hall, showed the specimen to them and also visited several drug stores, where he conferred with the owners in regard to it. One druggist told him that he had better consult C. D. Howard, the New Hampshire state chemist, at Concord and that he would tell him just what the mass was.

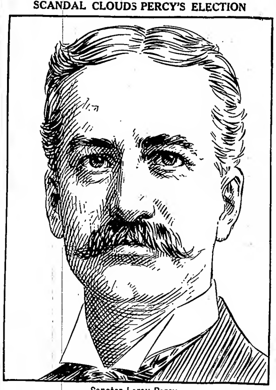
Mr. Levesque went to Concord and showed Mr. Howard the sample he had with him. In fact, he left a piece with him with which he might make a test.

A peculiar and startling result of the discovery in the St. Lawrence river is the fact that about 20 or more pounds of the mass which was taken by Mr. Levesque's brother at the time has been kicking around the family farmhouse in Canada for three years and in hot weather has been used instead of a stone to keep the doors ojar. Mr. Levesque has a piece in his possession which weighs about ten pounds and which he will undoubtedly guard closely until he disposes of it at the market price to some perfumer.

Speaking of his find, Mr. Levesque said that three years ago, while on a visit to his old home in Freserville, Canada, he and his brother Florence went gunning on the St. Lawrence river in a boat. While floating along he sighted a yellow object and, believing it to be an animal, fired at least three shots at it. He then ran the boat alongside the mess and pulled it in.

The mass was taken home and his brother took the greater part of it, leaving it at the family homestead. No one there has ever believed that it was of value and it has been used to keep the doors open and serve as a weight.

SCANDAL CLOUDS PERCY'S ELECTION



Senator Leroy Percy.

JACKSON, MISS.—The recent election of Leroy Percy to the United States senate is clouded with scandal by the indictment of L. C. Dulancy, a planter, on the charge of offering a bribe to State Senator Theodore Bilbo to vote for Percy. Bilbo was a supporter of Vardaman and says he accepted part of the alleged bribe money to use it as evidence, and bonded it to a minister with a statement of facts. Those who favored the election of Percy declare the charge is without foundation. A thorough investigation has been started by the grand jury.

Ill Luck in Horseshoe.

Burlington, N. J.—Clifford Price, liveryman and boniface, has lost his faith in the horseshoe as an emblem of good luck. While examining the foot of a horse attached to a coal cart the other morning the animal, made restless by a loose nail in its hoof, knocked the liveryman to the ground and dragged the cart, with a ton of coal aboard, over him. Friends thought Price had been killed, and he was taken to his hotel, but, although badly bruised, there were no bones broken, and his physician predicts an early recovery.

Kidney Troubles Grew Worse Every Year.

Charles S. Bailey, 808 Locust St., Yankton, S. Dak., says: "I suffered agony from kidney complaint and was almost helpless. The disease grew worse each year although I doctored and used many remedies. There were excruciating pains in my back and the urine passed too freely. Doan's Kidney Pills gradually helped me and soon I was cured. Some years ago I recommended them and have had no trouble since."

Treatment for Lump Jaw.

Lump jaw is due to a fungus which is usually taken into the animal's system in feed consumed. Lump jaw is liable to affect the glands of the throat or the bones of the head, writes Dr. David Roberts in American Cultivator. It is not advisable to keep an animal thus afflicted lingering in a herd. On the other hand it is advisable to either treat such an animal or kill it, as such animals invite diseases into the herd, owing to the fact that they are so reduced in vitality that they have no resisting power. A remarkably large per cent. of such cases can be successfully treated if taken in time by opening up the enlargement and washing it out with a strong antiseptic solution, like five of carbolic acid in water, and putting the animals on a tonic. In this way the afflicted animal is not only saved, but the entire herd is protected against disease.

Because a home is in the country—because it is on a farm—is only an added reason why it should be more up-to-date and attractive, for those who are fortunate enough to live in the country really spend more time in their homes than do those who live in cities.

And it is also true that farm homes and farm life is daily becoming more and more attractive. The inside of our house is our home, so why not make it nice and attractive, homely and cheerful, up-to-date and modern.

You wouldn't think of burning tallow candles, yet why use wall paper?

In order to educate a few refined people in every community to the artistic beauty of soft velvety alabastined walls of solid color, a free offer of beautiful wall stencils of classic design is made to every reader of this paper.

It is also possible to secure without any expense color suggestions for your home telling you the most suitable colors, to use the best arrangement, curtains and over curtains, etc.—in fact the services of a decorative architect are at your disposal without charge to you.

In cities there are many and most excellent designers of interior decoration, but it takes money and time to carry out their ideas. This same service is at the disposal of every reader if he asks for it, and better than all, it tells you how you can either do the work yourself or direct some one else. It gives you exact shades and colors, and the stencils to do the work without charge.

O, Those Tears!

"So you are going to marry Mr. Glimson?" smiles the first fair young thing. "I was engaged to him last year. He positively wept when I broke the engagement."

"I know he did," answers the other beauteous creature. "He told me that he wept—for joy."

Mrs. Hoyle—You seem unhappy.

HELP MAN TO DRESS

When It Becomes Necessary There Will Be Fewer Divorces.

So Declares Dr. Luther H. Gulick, Director of Child Hygiene Department of Russell Sage Foundation, New York.

Chicago.—If man had the lapels of his coat and his collar and necktie in the middle of his back, so his wife would be called upon to assist him in dressing, even as he is called upon to fasten her hooks and eyes, there would be fewer divorces, because conditions would be less one-sided. Anyway, this is the belief of Dr. Luther H. Gulick, director of the child hygiene department of the Russell Sage foundation, New York, who spoke on "The New Attitude Toward Health" before the Cook County Teachers' association.

"What is needed for the harmony of the homes is more co-operation between man and wife," he said. "A man can dress himself, but a woman has to have assistance.

"We men like to laugh at you women at every chance we get," said the speaker. "We note with interest how the fashion people get together every year in Paris and decide what you shall wear, and then we see you come out with your high hats and your wide hats, and and your hats tipped up this way, and your hats with nothing in front.

"But after all this has been observed, I look at myself and I see this lapel on my coat, and in the lapel I see a buttonhole, but on the other side there is no button for it, and I wonder what the buttonhole is for. I see no use for it, and yet I would not buy a coat that does not have one there. That buttonhole must have a function, and I suspect it is a social function.

"And then I notice this piece of starched linen around the neck. And here is a piece of colored silk that goes with it, and a pin, of the color related to the color of the tie, stuck in it, and all this just for ornament in a place where the lapels are turned down, exposing a part of the body generally conceded to be most in need of protection. And I ask myself 'Just why?'

"Well, let's say there are 60 million coats, and then compute how much might be saved if all the work on those lapels were not performed. Then let us ask ourselves if it would not be just as well if the lapel were located here" (indicating his side) "or here" (indicating the middle of his back).

"Why if the men had their lapels in the middle of the back, making it necessary for their wives to help them dress themselves, we would have fewer divorces in this world. Things would not be so one-sided as they are at present, with the woman a helpless creature and the man able to take care of himself.

"Fashion is just a little ripple on the surface that carries beneath it the things of the world that make life worth while."

THIS "ROOSTER" LAYS EGGS

Hen With Comb and Spurs of Cockerel Causes Agitation Among Poultry Experts.

Ithaca, N. Y.—When the poultry experts at the State College of Agriculture at Cornell got word the other day from F. R. Glover of Lisle, N. Y., that he had a rooster that laid eggs, they told him to burry the bird here or he would have to show them.

Glover said that he was so sure the bird was a rooster that he had cut off the comb and wattles and prepared to put spurs on it when it laid an egg. On the way here another egg was laid.

The experts said the fowl was a hen, but they had never seen one with such masculine markings.

Builds Many Big Airships

Nine Aerial "Dreadnaughts" Being Built by Germany—Two Will Hold Many Persons.

Berlin.—Germany's "supremacy in the air" is graphically revealed in a new book reviewing the "aerial strength" of the various powers.

The author is Lieut. Neumann, superintendent of the aeronautic school maintained by the German Aerial Navy League at Friedrichshafen, the headquarters of Count Zeppelin.

Neumann shows that the German aerial armada at the present time consists of 14 completed vessels, each with records of numerous successful flights.

Only eight of them, two Zeppelins, two Parsevals and four of the Gross type, are actually owned by the war department and are stationed at various strategic points, but the other six are of course at the army's disposal in case of an emergency.

Nine other vessels, "four vastly larger and more powerful than any yet constructed," are approaching completion and will be ready for commission in midsummer. Two Zeppelins are intended for passenger and excursion business.

They accommodate 30 or 40 persons each and are built to travel at nearly 50 miles an hour. Two others nearly as big as the Zeppelin Dreadnaughts are the so-called Schutte and Traves vessels, which are constructed, respectively, of American pine and iron piping, as distinguished from the aluminum and steel hitherto used for the clippers of the clouds.

Germans are still superlatively enthusiastic over their future in the air and are determined to keep the big lead attained over all other nations.

"Dollar Club" Gets Pennies

How New York Street Car Company Beat Yonkers People at Their Own Game.

New York.—It's a stubborn and perverse generation up in Yonkers. That town is only 20 miles distant from this seat of light, but the middle of Africa is no more sunken in mental midnight. Not long ago pay-as-you-enter cars were put on there and although every other community in which they had been tried has hailed them as a distinct step forward Yonkers rose in the air and rebelled.

"They formed dollar bill clubs," said Leslie Sutherland, president of the street railroad. "Every man, woman and child who got on the car handed the conductor a dollar bill and demanded change. Kind helpers used to provide themselves with a pocketful of dollar bills in the morning to give to others in return for small change, so that the company would be bothered as much as possible.

"Of course the conductor would run out of change—and the possessor of the dollar would go and take his seat and sometimes the conductor would get to him later on with the 96 cents for his ducat. And then they howled like a parcel of wolves smelling a chicken roost and demanded of the public service commission that we be directed to take the cars off. Mind you, the commission had just ordered us to put them on."

"And did you beat the game?"

Mr. Sutherland swelled up in justifiable pride.

"Say," said he, "we've got that obstreperous dollar-bill bunch feeding out of our hands. We staked our conductors to sacks containing 95 pennies. They weighed about a pound and a quarter and the conductors kept a peck measure full between their feet on the rear platform. There was about a week when Yonkers was on a copper basis. No one paid a bill with anything but cents. Then the dollar-bill clubs disbanded."

Longlived Family.

Molina, Kan.—Mrs. Anna Bolcourt is dead at the age of 106 years. Her family is believed to hold all records for longevity.

William Hamilton, a brother, is 99; a sister, Mrs. Sarah Byrns of Rushville, Ill., is 102, and another brother, James Hamilton, is 108.

A nephew, Zacharias Hamilton, is 73. He expects to live to be at least 100.

Boys in "Brickbat" Club.

Colwyn, Pa.—Residents of Spruce street, between Second and Third, are organizing a novel association of boys to be known as the "Brickbat club," to clean the rubbish from an adjacent lot. It is the intention to get the boys to pick up a certain number of stones daily and throw them toward a corner, from where they are to be carted away and disposed of.

Decrease in London Crime.

Burglary and house breaking are on the decrease in London.

It Seemed So.

The little son of the family happened to be idling his time in the kitchen when the colored porter came up out of the cellar, where he had been shoveling coal into the heater, grasped the white towel hanging on the door and passed into the hall. For an instant the youth gazed awe-struck at the coal dust impressions left on the towel, then yelled after the retreating negro:

"Oh, Sam, your color's coming off!"—Judge.

AN UP-TO-DATE STOVE

Do you realize there is no longer any reason why you should use a coal range? Oil is cheaper than coal; it is lighter and easier to handle, and gives an intense heat. Provided you have the right stove, oil is more economical, cleaner and less trouble. Have you seen the

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

The accompanying illustration gives you only a rough idea of its appearance. You really can't appreciate it until you either use it yourself, or talk to someone who has used it. It does everything that a coal range will do—except heat the room. The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove will do anything, from heating a kettle of water to cooking a course dinner, but it won't heat a room. It doesn't "smell," it doesn't smoke. It can't get out of order. Light it and it is ready. Turn it down and it is out. Only a woman who knows the trouble of carrying coal and cooking in a hot kitchen can appreciate what it means to have a clean, perfect stove that will cook anything, boil, bake or roast, and yet won't heat the kitchen. How is it done? The flame is controlled in turquoise-blue enamel chimneys, and directed against the bottom of pot, pan, kettle or oven, and only there. The flame operates exactly where it is needed—and nowhere else. With this stove your kitchen is cool.

The nickel finish with the bright blue of the chimneys makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

Heiden-Krueger.

Carl Krueger and his bride arrived in this city last Saturday and are spending a few days with relatives and Mr. Krueger is receiving the hearty congratulations of friends.

The Congregational church was handsomely decorated Thursday evening with ferns and potted plants in honor of the wedding which took place at 8:30 o'clock. The contacting parties were Miss Eva Heiden and Mr. Carl Krueger. Rev. N. H. May, pastor of the cluch, tied the nuptial knot, the impressive ring ceremony being used.

When Mrs. G. E. Langley, who presided at the pianio, began the wedding march the house was nearly filled with friends of the young couple, both from the city and the country. The bride, attended by Miss Marion Lord, as bridesmaid, and little Henrietta Richards, who acted as ring bearer, entered the church from the trout, while the minister, groom and G. S. Potter, who acted as best man, marched down the north aisle, the party meeting at the altar where the words were said uniting forever the two young hearts.

The bride was dressed in a beautiful gown of white silk, with ribbon and chiffon trimming, while the groom was clothed in the conventional black.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the bridal party and aboat 60 invited guests went to the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Otto Ulmer, where a wedding supper and reception was given.

The presents received by the newly married couple were numerons and handsome, as well as valuable.

While both the contracting parties have been residents of this city but a few months they have made many friends who offer congratalations.

The happy pair departed this morning for Red Lako Falls, Minn., the home of the groom, amid a shower of old shoes, rice and confetti.

If you know how to pat the yellow posies to sleep just tell the Gazette about it because the Gazette has aboat omillion subscribers all of whom aro anxious to know how to soak it to the dandelions.

HAVE YOU BEEN INTERVIEWED BY UNCLE SAM?

If You Have Not Been Counted by the Enumerator, Report to Him Before Saturday Noon.

If you have not been counted for the 1910 census you should get busy at once. And if you know of anybody who has not been counted see that he gets busy. E. G. Buse, the enumerator, has made a thorough canvas of the city but it is not improbable that some have been missed. If the enumerator overlooked you it is up to you to get busy and report to him before Saturday noon. The work of the enumerator is to be completed this week.

It Never Pays

It never pays to talk behind a mule's back, or behind a man's back, either. That's why I come out straight in the open and say without reserve that I sell the greatest manure spreader in the world, and to prove it, I sell it to you on a liberal guarantee. I don't insinuate this or say anything against any other manure spreader. I state only the truth—The Great Western Spreader is the best in the world. It proves itself. It is built stronger and will last longer, and while it costs a little more, it is like buying a good pair of shoes for $6 or a poor pair for $2. You get satisfaction and service and pleasure out of the Great Western Spreader. If you don't, bring it back and I will look pleasant. If all the farmers in the world were using Great Western Spreaders, just as seventy per cent of them are, this would be a happier world by thirty per cent. If you are thinking of having your picture taken, buy a Great Western Spreader. It will give you a contented and happy look and make your wife love you because you appear so young again.

POLITICS IN THE SAINTLY CITY

Woman Member of St. Paul School Board Wants to Know.

[Special Correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, May 10. The next Democratic state convention will be held in Minneapolis—the date July 28th, the place, the auditorium. There will be 1,043 delegates, one delegate for each 200 votes cast for governor Johnson and two at large from every county except Ramsey, Hennepin and St. Louis—this with a view, I suppose, of having the delegates more nearly proportioned to the number of voters than if all counties, big and little, were allowed the samo number of delegates at large without regard to population as according to the Republican plan.

As to Democratic State Leaders.

The fact that the convention is to be held in Minneapoils seems to indicate that the men who had the matter in charge anticipated the nomination of John Lind. Certainly if he consents to run he will be the candidate. If not Congressman Hammond will no doubt be drafted. In either case the party will present to the people of the state a candidate for whom they will on no occasion have cause to blush, and moreover a candidate who will have the full confidence of the voters without respect to the party.

The St. Paul Election.

The Republicans are quite cocky over the result of the election in St. Paul. Whatever caused it it was a landslide allright. However, the issues were purely local and had nothing to do with the principles of the party. The Demoratic candidate was unfortunate in his name which was Haas. Another man by the name of Haas had undertaken last year to equalize the assessments, which have for years been notoriously unequal. In doing so it was inevitable that a number of assessments had to be raised. As a consequence an appreciable number of the voters had to pay more taxes. They revenged themselves on Haas, the candidate for mayor, for what Haas the assessor had done to them. That seems to have been the greatest conse for the slump.

The New Mayor a Safe Man.

There is no doubt too that certain interests affected by the character of the city administration regarded Mr. Keller, the Republican candidate for mayor, as "a safe man." There will be no running amuck under his administration. Unlike Mayor Lawler he won't go hunting for trouble.

Feeding Patients Bull Butter.

Not that anybody believes that Moyor Lawler was altogether in the wroug in the campaign he has made, with the local board of heatlh and the city hospitals his ire; although perhaps with equal justice he might have aimed at other departments which have more to do with spending the city's money. For instance the other day the Mayor learned that they were buying oleomargarine by the 60 pound tub out of the city hospital, and this is the "Bread and Batter State." Naturally he wanted to know whether the unfortunate patients were fed on the grease; and whether in the dining room notice was posted up as required by law that oleomargarine was used there in the place of batter. And it is a subject on which a good many others besides Mayor Lawler would like a little light.

A Popular Candidate.

It is perhaps not the least significant result of the St. Paul election that Tom Kane, who was a candidate for the assembly, was elected away up at the head of the ticket, though a majority of the men elected were Republicans. The assembly is elected not by wards but by the entire city. Mr. Kane's vote is significant of what may be anticipated if he decides to run for congress, as he is urged to do against Congressman Stevens who in the recent congressional contest became identified with the Cannon clique. Mr. Stevens has been making political capital of a kind by starting a fight against the long and short haul clause of the railway bill. His contention, however, that railroads should be permitted to charge more for a long than a short haul was something even a reactionary congress wouldn't stand for. Possibly Mr. Stevens is not so much to blame. Powerful interests in his constituency on which he has been accustomed to rely for support were behind him no doubt in his demand.

Disgruntled Leaders.

And as to the railroad bill the Congressional leaders are all up in the air. They wanted to legalize mergers. The Democrats and the progressive Republicans wouldn't stand for it. They wanted also to legalze those agreements made illegal by the Shermon Law. The Democrats and progressive Republicans wouldn't stand for that either, unless they coupled it with a provision that the rate agreed upon should first have the approval of the interstate commerce commissions. That wasn't at all what Aldrich and Elkins and their crowd wanted. so both the sections which were about all there was to the bill, had to go by the board. Since then the senate leaders have been in a fit and threaten to read the progressives out of the party and to discipline the president himself because he wasn't on hand to wield the big stick. There seems every likelihood of there being a big blowup in Congress one of these days. At all events the reactionaries are determined to make their campaign on the reactionary legislation congress has passed and the reactionary legislation it has tried to pass and failed. To that of course no one can seriously object. If the reactionaries can stand it surely the insurgents and Democrats can."

An Inquisitive Member of the School Board.

They have a lady now on the St. Paul school board who wants to know, you know. The other day a bill was presented to the board for a manual for teachers on the study of geography. It seems to have been a work in the getting up of which teachers co-operated; nevertheless it was copyrighted in the name of the supreintendent of the St. Paul city schools. Here is one place where the lady member wanted to know apparently why the superintendent got all the credit. She was formerly a teacher herself and seems to think that even school marms should

MRS. E. NORMANDEAU

Passed Away at St. Vincent Hospital, Crookston, Sunday Morning.

Mrs. Normandeau, wife ot Eus. Normandeau of this city, passed away at St. Vincent hospitol, Crookston, where she had been taken for surgical treatment, at nine o'clock Sunday morning. Mrs. Normandeau had been ill only a few days, but her condition became so alarming that she was taken to Crookston Friday for an operation. The operation was performed Saturday forenoon, but the patient was so weak that she could not withstand the shock.

The remains were brought to this city Sunday and the funeral was conducted at St. Joseph's church, of which deceased was a member, at 10:30 o'clock Tuesday morning, Rev. Fr. Fayolle officiating. There was a large attendance of friends at the funeral to show by their presence their sympathy with the bereaved family in their sad affliction.

The members of the Woman's Catholic Order of Forresters and the Ladies of St. Thomas and the members of the C. O. F. lodge ettended in a body and acted as escort.

Mrs. Normandeau was fifty years old the sixth of February. She was born in the state of New York. When a young girl she went to Canada and thirty-two years ago she and Mr. Normandeau were married at Oka, Canada. Ten years later they came west and in 1889 they settled in Red Lake Falls and the family home had since been in this city.

Mrs. Normandeau is survived by her husband and nine children all of whom are living at home except the one married son, E. H. Normandeau, and his home is also in this city. A number of the children are small and under such circumstances it seems sad that the life that is gone could not have been spared.

Judge Richardson Now.

The county commissioners met last Friday and accepted the bond of the newly appointed judge of probate, Ira C. Richardson, and it is Judge Richardson now. Mrs. S. A. Swanson received an appointment as deputy.

ABOUT THE INDUSTRIAL CONTEST

Superintendents Anderson and Erickson Talked to Nine Hundred People.

Interesting School Children in Red Lake County in Industrial Contest.

In a trip over Red Lake county last week Supt. H. F. Anderson and Supt. Erickson of Douglas county visited about thirty of the schools of the county and explained to nine hundred people the work of the industrial contest which is to be taken up by the public school children of Red Lake county.

The industrial contest is a contest in the production of corn, grain, fruit and vegetables by Minnesota boys and girls under sightees years of age. The work has been very successfully carried on for the past several years and now more than forty counties hold these contests or school fairs. Besides the agricultural feature there will be cooking and sewing contests.

It is probable that five fairs or exhibits will be held in the county, at Thief River Falls, St Hilaire, Red Lake Folls and Brooks. The public school children are to prepare and bring their exhibits of agricultural products and sewing and cooking to the place of holding the fair. These will be placed on exhibit and judged and prizes of money and merchandise awarded to boys and girls making the best exhibits.

The contest work is considered valuable, of course, in the instruction it gives the boys and girls in the general duties about the farm and home. It has been known to have that gratifying result in counties where it has been carried on for a number of years.

NARCISSE MARTINEAU

Deceased is survived by his wife and three sons and one daughter. The sons are Henry, who resides at Crookston, and Napoleon and Victor of this city. The daughter, Mrs. Eugene Gandette, lives at North Yakima, Wash.

MORE ABOUT POTATOES

Company Will Contract for Big Amount if Planted.

About one half of the two carloads of potatoes shipped in here last week have been disposed. D. E. Ryan & Co., the people who shipped the potatoes in, are anxious that the farmers take the rest of them. They are selected seed potatoes, Early Ohios, of excellent quality and it will be a big advantage if all potatoes grown in the vicinity of Red Lake Falls are of one variety. The potatoes will be given out to farmers without the expenditure of any money, the company agreeing to supply a bushel of seed for two bushels of potatoes to be returned in the fall. D. E. Ryan & Co. plan the erection of a potato warehouse in Red Lake Falls this summer and they are now ready to contract for the purchase of all the potatoes that may be grown on five hundred or one thousand acres.

Benoit-Marcotte.

Miss Sophia Benoit, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. C. Benoit of this city, and Mr. Archie Marcotte of Dorothy were united in marriage Tuesday morning. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church, in the presence of relatives and a number of guests, Rev. Fr. Feyolle officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Marcotte have gone to housekeeping on a farm near Dorothy.

Card of Thanks.

Eus. Normandeau and family desires, by this means, to express their sincere thanks to the Women's C. O. F. lodge, the Ladies of St. Thomas and the neighbors and friends for the many acts of kindness and sympathy shown them in their recent bereavement.

COL. ROOSEVELT SPEAKS IN PARIS

Addresses Distinguished Audience at Ancient University.

"CITIZENSHIP" HIS SUBJECT

Tells Students and Professors of Duty of France as Nation and Themselves as Individuals to the World—Reads Them Lectures on Sterility.

Paris, April 23.—Ex-President Roosevelt today lectured before an audience at the Sorbonne, that comprised the greatest gathering of the intellect and learning of France that has gathered at this ancient educational seat in more than a century, if ever before. Long before the time announced for the beginning of Colonel Roosevelt's lecture every seat in the great auditorium was filled, and thousands lined the walks and streets about the university. Colonel Roosevelt said:

Foundations of Our Republic.

This was the most famous university of mediaeval Europe at a time when no one dreamed that there was a new world to discover. Its services to the cause of human knowledge already stretched far back in to the remote past at the time when my forefathers, three centuries ago, were among the sparse bands of traders, plowmen, wood choppers, and fisherfolk who, in a hard struggle with the iron unfriendliness of the Indian-haunted land, were laying the foundations of what has now become the giant republic of the west. To conquer a continent, to tame the shaggy roughness of wild nature means grim warfare; and the generations engaged in it cannot keep, still less add to, the stores of garnered wisdom which were therein, and which are still in the hands of their brethren who dwell in the old land. To conquer the wilderness means to wrest victory from the same hostile forces with which mankind struggled in the immemorial infancy of our race. The primeval conditions must be met by primeval qualities which are incompatible with the retention of much that has been painfully acquired by humanity as through the ages it has striven upward toward civilization. In conditions so primitive there can be but a primitive culture.

Building the Higher Life.

As the country grows, its people, who have won success in so many lines, turn back to try to recover the possessions of the mind and the spirit, which perforce their fathers threw aside in order better to wage the first rough battles for the continent their children inherit. The leaders of thought and of action grope their way forward to a new life, realizing, sometimes dimly, sometimes clear-sightedly, that the life of material gain, whether for a nation or an individual, is of value only as a foundation, only as there is added to it the uplift that comes from devotion to loftier ideals. The new life thus sought can in part be developed afresh from what is round about in the new world; but it can be developed in full only by freely drawing upon the treasure houses of the old world, upon the treasures stored in the ancient abodes of wisdom and learning, such as this where I speak today.

It is a mistake for any nation merely to copy another; but it is an even greater mistake, it is a proof of weakness in any nation, not to be anxious to learn from another, and willing and able to adapt that learning to the new national conditions and make it fruitful and productive therein. It is for us of the new world to sit at the feet of the Gamaliel of the old; then if we have the right stuff in us, we can show that Paul, in his turn, can become a teacher as well as a scholar.

Today, I shall speak to you on the subject of individual citizenship, the one subject of vital importance to you, my hearers, and to me and my countrymen, because you and we are citizens of great democratic republics. A democratic republic such as each of ours—an effort to realize in its full sense government by, of, and for the people—represents the most gigantic of all possible social experiments, the one fraught with greatest possibilities alike for good and for evil.

Great Lessons of France.

France has taught many lessons to other nations; surely one of the most important is the lesson her whole history teaches, that a high artistic and literary development is compatible with notable leadership in arms and statecraft. The brilliant gallantry of the French soldier has for many centuries been proverbial, and during these same centuries at every court in Europe the "free masons of fashion" have treated the French tongue as their common speech; while every artist and men of letters, and every man of science able to appreciate that marvelous instrument of precision, French prose, has turned towards France for aid and inspiration. How long the leadership in arms and letters has lasted is curiously illustrated by the fact that the earliest masterpiece in modern tongue is the splendid French epic which tells of Roland's doom and the vengeance of Charlemagne when the lords of the Frankish host were stricken at Roncesvalles.

Need of Individual Character.

Let those who have, keep, let those who have not, strive to attain a high standard of cultivation and scholarship. Yet let us remember that these stand second to certain other things. There is need of a sound body, and even more need of a sound mind. But above mind and above body stands character, the sum of those qualities which we mean when we speak of a man's force and courage, of his good faith and sense of honor. I believe in exercise of the body, always provided that we keep in mind that physical development is a means and not an end. I believe, of course, in giving to all the people a good education. But the education must contain much besides book-learning in order to be really good. We must ever remember that no keenness, and subtleness of intellect, no polish, no cleverness in any way make up of the lack of great solid qualities—self-restraint, self-mastery, common sense, the power of accepting individual responsibility and yet, of acting in conjunction with others. Courage and resolution; these are the qualities which mark a masterful people. Without them no people can control itself or save itself from being controlled from the outside. I speak to a brilliant assemblage; I speak in a great university which represents the flower of the highest intellectual development; I pay all homage to intellect, and to elaborate and specialized training of the intellect; and yet I know I shall have the assent of all you present when I add that more important still are the commonplace, every-day qualities and virtues.

The Evils of Sterility.

In the next place the good man should be both a strong and a brave man; that is, he should be able to fight, he should be able to serve his country as a soldier if the need arises. There are well-meaning philosophers who declaim against the unrighteousness of war. They are right, only they lay all their emphasis upon the unrighteousness. War is a dreadful things, and unjust; war is a crime against humanity. But it is such a crime because it is unjust, not because it is war. The choice must ever be in favor of righteousness, and this whether the alternative be peace or whether the alternative be war. The question must not be merely, is there to be peace or war? The question must be, is the right to prevail? Are the great laws of righteousness once more to be fulfilled? And the answer from a strong and virile people must be, "Yes," whatever the cost. Every honorable effort should always be made by the individual in private life to keep out of a brawl, to keep out of trouble; but no self-respecting individual, no self-respecting nation, can or ought to submit to wrong.

Finally, even more important than ability to work, even more important than ability to fight at need, is it to remember that the chief of blessings for any nation is that it shall leave its seed to inherit the land. It was the crown of blessings in Biblical times, and it is the crown of blessings now. The greatest of all curses is the curse of sterility, and the severest of all condemnations should be that visited upon willful sterility. The first essential in any civilization is that the man and the woman shall be father and mother of healthy children, so that the race shall increase and not decrease. If this is not so, if through no fault of society there is failure to increase, it is a great misfortune. If the failure is due to deliberate and willful fault, then it is not merely a misfortune, it is one of those crimes of ease and self-indulgence, of shrinking from pain and effort and risk, which in the long run nature punishes more heavily than any other.

Idle Achievements.

If we of the great republics, if we, the free people who claim to have emancipated ourselves from the thraldom of wrong and error, bring down on our heads the curse that comes upon the willfully barren, then it will be an idle waste of breath to prattle of our achievements, to boast of all that we have done. No refinement of life, no delicacy of taste, no material progress, no sordid heaping up of riches, no sensuous development of art and literature, can in any way compensate for the loss of the great fundamental virtues; and of the great fundamental virtues, the greatest is the race's power to perpetuate the race.

But if a man's efficiency is not guided and regulated by a moral sense, then the more efficient he is the worse he is, the more dangerous to the body politic. Courage, intellect, all the masterful qualities, serve but to make a man more evil if they are used merely for that man's own advancement, with brutal indifference to the rights of others. It speaks ill for the community if the community worships these qualities and treats their possessors as heroes regardless of whether the qualities are used rightly or wrongly. It makes no difference as to the precise way in which this sinister efficiency is shown. It makes no difference whether such a man's force and ability betray themselves in the career of money maker or politician, soldier or orator, journalist or popular leader. If the man works for evil, then the more successful he is, the more he should be despised and condemned by all upright and farseeing men. To judge a man merely by success is an abhorrent wrong; and if the people at large habitually so judge men, if they grow to condone wickedness because the wicked man triumphs, they show their inability to understand that in the last analysis free institutions rest upon the character of citizenship and that by such admiration of evil they prove themselves unfit for liberty.

The Idea of True Liberty.

The good citizen will demand liberty for himself, and as a matter of pride he will see to it that others receive the liberty which he thus claims as his own. Probably the best test of true love of liberty in any country is the way in which minorities are treated in that country. Not only should there be complete liberty in matters of religion and opinion, but complete liberty for each man to lead his life as he desires, provided only that in so doing he does not wrong his neighbor. Persecution is bad because it is persecution, and without reference to which side happens at the moment to be the persecutor and which the persecuted. Class hatred is bad in just the same way, and without any regard to the individual who, at a given time, substitutes loyalty to a class for loyalty to the nation, or substitutes hatred of men because they happen to come in a certain social category, for judgment awarded them according to their conduct. Remember always that the same measure of condemnation should be extended to the arrogance which would look down upon or crush any man because he is poor, and to the envy and hatred which would destroy a man because he is wealthy. The overbearing brutality of the man of wealth or power, and the envious and hateful malice directed against wealth or power, are really at root merely different manifestations of the same quality, merely the two sides of the same shield.

The man who, if born to wealth and power, exploits and ruins his less fortunate brethren is at heart the same as the greedy and violent demagogue who excites those who have not property to plunder those who have. Of one man in especial, beyond anyone else, the citizens of a republic should beware, and that is of the man who appeals to them to support him on the ground that he is hostile to other citizens of the republic, that he will secure for those who elect him, in one shape or another, profit at the expense of other citizens of the republic. It makes no difference whether he appeals to class hatred or class interest, to religious or anti-religious prejudice, the man who makes such an appeal should always be presumed to make it for the sake of furthering his own interest. The very thing that an intelligent and self-respecting member of a democratic community should not do is to reward any public man because that public man says he will get the private citizen something to which this private citizen is not entitled, or will gratify some emotion or animosity which this private citizen ought not to possess.

A Ranch Story.

Let me illustrate this by one anecdote from my own experience: A number of years ago I was engaged in cattle-ranching on the great plains of the western United States. There were no fences. The cattle wandered free, the ownership of each being determined by the brand; the calves were branded with the brand of the cows they followed. If, on the round-up, an animal was passed by, the following year it would appear as an unbranded yearling and was then called a maverick. By the custom of the country these mavericks were branded with the brand of the man on whose range they were found. One day I was riding the range with a newly hired cowboy, and we came upon a maverick.

I said to him: "It is so-and-so's brand," naming the man on whose range we happened to be.

He answered: "That's all right, boss, I know my business."

In another moment I said to him: "Hold, on, you are putting on my brand."

To this he answered: "That's all right; I always put on the boss' brand."

I answered: "Oh, very well. Now you go straight back to the ranch and get what is owing to you. I don't need you any longer."

He jumped up and said: "Why, what's the matter? I was putting on your brand."

And I answered: "Yes, my friend, and if you will steal for me you will steal from me."

Now the same principle which applies in private life applies also in public life. If a public man tries to get your vote by saying that he will do something wrong in your interest, you can be absolutely certain that if ever it becomes worth his while he will do something wrong against your interest.

France and the United States.

And now, my host, a word in parting. You and I belong to the only two great republics among the great powers of the world. The ancient friendship between France and the United States has been, on the whole, a sincere and disinterested friendship. A calamity to you would be a sorrow to us. But it would be more than that. In the seething turmoil of the history of humanity certain nations stand out as possessing a peculiar power or charm, some special gift of beauty or wisdom or strength, which puts them among the immortals, which makes them rank forever with the leaders of mankind. France is one of the nations. For her to sink would be a loss to all the world. There are certain lessons of brilliance and of generous gallantry that she can teach better than any of her sister nations. When the French peasantry sang of Malbrook it was to tell how the soul of this warrior-foe took flight upward through the laurels he had won. Nearly seven centuries ago Froissart, writing of a time of dire disaster, said that the realm of France was never so stricken that there were not left men who would valiantly fight for it. You have had a great past. I believe that you will have a great future. Long may you carry yourselves proudly as citizens of a nation which bears a leading part in the teaching and uplifting of mankind.

WANTS DAMAGES

BROUGHT BY WIDOWS

Should Women's Appeal Be Sustained Many Suits Against Cities Would Result Is Belief of Attorneys.

St. Paul.—A case that will be watched with interest by the officers of every municipality in the state, as well as by health officers and the public in general, was argued before the supreme court last week. It was that of Della Keever and Kate Flanagan, of Mankato, who are suing the city for $5,000 each for the death of their husbands, who succumbed from typhoid fever during the typhoid epidemic three years ago. They allege that the city was responsible because, they charge, the epidemic was caused by impure water and defective sewer construction, and they contend that the city is liable. The women lost in the lower court and appealed.

Should their appeal be sustained it would mean an endless number of lawsuits, not only for Mankato, but for a number of other cities where typhoid epidemics have occurred. In Mankato alone there were in that epidemic nearly forty deaths and many other cases of illness. In each case there would be litigation to establish the facts, after the principle has been established.

City Sold Water.

The principal argument for the women was made by A. C. Carlson, of Albert Lea. He contended that the case was different from many others where damage is done to individuals by the city when the city is held not liable. The furnishing of water was not a public, but a private function in each of the parties to furnish water for a stipulated price. If they negligently furnished such water as caused the death of the customers, Mr. Carlson contended that the city was liable. The case was different, he said, from cases where the city does damage through water furnished for public use, such as for fire protection or sprinkling. The damage had been done and the individuals were not to blame, he said, and it was only a question now whether the individuals should bear all the burden or the community help to bear part of it.

The arguments for the city were made by S. B. Wilson and H. L. Schmitt, who cited numerous cases which they contended showed that a municipality would not be liable for damages in such cases.

WILL BUY WATER PLANT.

Stillwater City Council Authorizes an Expenditure of $145,000.

Stillwater.—The city council has decided to buy the Stillwater Water company's property for $145,000.

The thirty-year franchise of the company expires April 30. The contract passed by the council dates from July 1, 1910. An election may be held before the general election on the proposition of bonding the city for $145,000 of 4 per cent bonds. That matter and what will be paid the holding water company for service until the plant is taken over will be decided by a committee of the council.

The contract reads for payment of $10,000 for fourteen years and $5,000 the final year, with interest.

The Stillwater Water Company is a stock company, of which Captain Durand, of Stillwater, is president.

BEMIDJI AGITATES PAVING.

City Council Prepares to Submit the Question to Taxpayers.

Bemidji.—The first steps towards paving the streets of Bemidji were taken when an ordinance was introduced in the council calling for an appropriation of $12,000.

The ordinance does not specify which streets shall be paved, other than that they shall be in the business district, the streets to be selected by the council at a later date. The ordinance, if passed by the council, will be submitted to a vote of citizens on June 14.

A second ordinance to bond the city for $15,000 for grading streets and repairing bridges, also the city hall and the city jail, was given its first reading. The two ordinances will require the bonding of the city for $27,000.

REFUSE TO PAY TAX.

Two Duluth Phone Companies Oppose Gross Earnings Levy.

Duluth.—In proceedings brought to force the Duluth and Zenith City telephone companies to pay their personal property taxes for 1909 both companies filed their answers with the clerk of the district court.

TRAIN SMASHES INTO A TROLLEY

Accident Near Sauk Rapids Nearly Proves Fatal.

St. Cloud. — No. Eleven, the Northern Pacific west-bound Brainerd local train, ran into a street car at a crossing just a short distance this side of Sauk Rapids. There were 25 people in the car. The train rounded a sharp curve and struck the rear end of the car, throwing all of the people out, several narrowly escaping death under the wheels of the train.

Dormitory to Be Started Next Week.

Winona.—Seidlitz & Werner, who have been awarded the contract for erecting the new normal dormitory, have begun work. They will have until the 1st of March to complete the building and will get it under roof before cold weather, and finish it during the winter. The east and west lodges will remain in their present locations, both being residences of the early days in Winona, until the dormitory is completed, when they will be torn down.

WANTS CONSERVATION CONGRESS

Ralph Wheelock Urges Claims of the Twin Cities.

"Washington, D. C. — Minnesota's invitation to the National Conservation league to hold the next conservation congress in the Twin Cities was presented to Thomas R. Shipp, secretary of the National Conservation league, by Ralph Wheelock, secretary to Governor Eberhart.

In his presentation to the league Wheelock goes into details relative to the interest in conservation in Minnesota as evidenced at the recent conservation congress in March. He states that local organizations of the Twin Cities are already perfected, and that in the important matter of publicity the Twin Cities and the state as a whole have already in perfect working order exceptional facilities for covering every detail of such work. In both cities, the commercial clubs and other business organizations, including the Publicity Club of Minneapolis, are ready to push the congress in every way possible.

Pledges Support of Press.

"Behind all this," says Wheelock, "newspapers of the Twin Cities are in full accord with the conservation movement in all its bearings. It is safe to say that their efforts in behalf of the national gathering would be measured only by the physical limitations of their respective editorial staffs and mechanical plants. What is true of daily newspapers is equally applicable to all other classes of publications in country."

Wheelock discusses climatic conditions, hotel facilities, and calls particular attention to a recent increase in the latter in both cities and also to near-by lake resorts, where such delegates as choose may secure quiet accommodation. He also calls attention to railroad facilities, including twelve of the leading railroads of the country which center at the Twin Cities.

Will Meet Other Propositions.

Closing his statement on behalf of Governor Eberhart and the Twin Cities, Wheelock says: "While it is not possible at this time for your committee on the one hand and our representatives on the other to enter into any specific arrangement as to provisions for the general expenses of congress, I am authorized to say that all such expenses will be taken care of. I would suggest in this connection that should you decide upon the Twin Cities an early conference should be held on the important details, and pending such conference I can only say further that the interests of the Twin Cities will meet any proposition that may be advanced on behalf of other cities seeking this same honor."

Discussing prospects of having the congress held in the Twin Cities, Wheelock said: "I feel confident that the committee will decide in our favor."

"DRYS" GAIN TERRITORY.

Not a Saloon Left Between Mankato and Des Moines.

Mankato, April 17.—As a result of elections held this week, there is not a saloon between Mankato and Des Moines, Iowa, along the Omaha road, a distance of 201 miles.

In Blue Earth county, Lake Crystal, Garden City, Vernon Center and Amboy have voted out the saloons. They have been "wet" towns, but last year they went "dry," and this year voted to continue so. This week Amboy voted on the license question and defeated it on a tie vote, in a total vote of 128. It was the most strenuous campaign that the village has seen in years. Conveyances were sent miles to bring hack voters temporarily sojourning in nearby villages.

Charles Chomberlain was elected mayor, Nathaniel Stephens, Stephen Lamoe and Fred Appitz councilmen, J. H. Dredge recorder, Charles Ott treasurer, N. W. Sargent justice, and Charles Chamberlain, constable.

NEW MAYOR PUTS ON "LID."

Sunday and Early Closing to Be Observed at Sauk Center.

Sauk Center.—The "lid" is on in Sauk Center, the first time for some months. The day on which he took the reins of municipal government in his hands, the new mayor, Dr. H. F. Hennemann, held a conference with the saloon men and told them he expected them to obey the law in all respects. He expected them to close, he said, at 11 p. m. on weekdays, to keep closed on Sundays, and to have regard for other provisions of the liquor laws.

The conference was a good-natured one and the liquor dealers agreed to assist the mayor in the strict enforcement of the laws. No threats were made, but every man present showed the right spirit and all went away feeling kindly toward the new executive. Mayor Hennemann says he expects this condition to continue throughout his administration.

BUSINESS MEN ORGANIZE.

New Club Selects "Boost for Owatonna" as Slogan.

Owatonna.—"Boost for Owatonna" is the slogan of the newly formed Owatonna Business Men's Association, and the idea is to be carried out in every possible way. At a banquet held in the Hotel Owatonna the business men decided to push Owatonna in every way. Over 100 business men have been enrolled in the new club, and each month a banquet will be held.

Board System a Success.

Winona.—The board system of managing public utilities has been proved a success in Winona in the case of the waterworks system, which for several years has been in charge of the board of municipal works. Under the business-like administration of this body the consumption of water has been greatly lessened through overcoming waste. Other economies have been practiced, so that for the municipal year just ending a balance of $6,959 is shown in the treasury.

"[illegible] alive this morning," Logo[illegible] answered, "and he is a strong [illegible]. But the strong die sometimes [illegible] by accident if not of a [illegible]."

"It is emptiness," said Baraka, still [illegible] him. "He will not die be[illegible] him."

"Allah forbid! But if such a thing [illegible] should you wish to go back [illegible] own people? Or would you [illegible] to speak the Frank and live in [illegible]?"

"If he were dead, which may Allah [illegible]," Baraka answered calmly, "I [illegible] I would ask you to find me a [illegible]."

"[illegible]" Logotheti could not repress [illegible] exclamation of surprise.

"[illegible] It is a shame for a woman [illegible] married. And an evil sight, [illegible] that I should go down to the [illegible] childless? Or is there any re[illegible] upon me? Therefore I would [illegible] for a husband, because I [illegible] no other friend but only you [illegible] the Feringhis. Moreover I [illegible] to the merchant's wife: [illegible] I have great wealth, and I [illegible] a rich husband, and one who [illegible] and pleasing to me, and who [illegible] take another wife; and if you [illegible] such a man, for whatsoever [illegible] may be, I will pay you five [illegible].'"

[illegible] made this remarkable state[illegible] of her intentions, Baraka was [illegible] expecting Logotheti to say [illegible]. What struck him was not [illegible] concluding sentence, for Asiatic [illegible]makers and peace-makers are [illegible]erally paid on some such basis, [illegible] the slim Tartar girl had proved [illegible] ago that she was a woman of [illegible]. What impressed Logotheti much more was what seemed the cool [illegible] of her point of view. It was evidently not a romantic passion for Kralinsky that had brought her from beyond Turkestan to London and Paris; her view had been simpler and more practical; she had seen the man who suited her, she had told him so, and had given him the secret of great wealth, and in return she expected him to marry her, if she found him alive. But if not, she would immediately take steps to obtain another to fill his place and be her husband, and she was willing to pay a high price to any one who could find one for her.

Logotheti had half expected some [illegible] thing, but was not prepared for her extreme directness; still less had he thought of becoming the matrimonial agent who was to find a match worthy of her hand and fortune. She was sitting beside him in a little ready-made French dress, open at the throat, and only a bit of veil twisted round her hair, as any European woman might wear it; possibly it was her dress that made what she said sound strangely in his ears, though it would have struck him as natural enough if she had been muffled in a yashmak and ferajeh, on the deck of a Bosphorus ferry boat.

He said nothing in answer, and sat thinking the matter over.

"I could not offer to pay you five per cent.," she said after a time, "because you are a king, but I could give you one of the fine rubies I have left, and you would look at it sometimes and rejoice because you had found Baraka a good husband."

Logotheti laughed low. She amused him exceedingly, and there were moments when he felt a new charm he had never known before.

"Why do you laugh?" Baraka asked, a little disturbed. "I would give you a good ruby. A king may receive a good ruby as a gift and not despise it. Why do you laugh at me? There came two German merchants to me in Paris to see my rubies, and when they had looked, they bought a good one, but not better than the one I would give you, and Spiro heard them say to each other in their own language that it was for their king, for Spiro understands all tongues. Then do you think that their king would not have been glad if I had given him the ruby as a gift? You cannot mock Baraka. Baraka knows what rubies are worth, and has some still."

"I do not mock you," Logotheti answered, with perfect gravity. "I laugh at my own thoughts. I said in my heart: 'If Baraka asks me for a husband, what will she say if I answer. 'Behold, I am the man, if you are satisfied!' This was my thought."

She was appeased at once, for she saw nothing extraordinary in his suggestion. She looked at him quietly and smiled, for she saw her chance.

"It is emptiness," she said. "I will have a man who has no other wife."

"Precisely," Logotheti answered, smiling. "I never had one."

"Now you are indeed mocking me!" she said, bending her sharp-drawn eyebrows.

"No. Every one knows it who knows me. In Europe, men do not always marry very young. It is not a fixed custom."

"I have heard so," Baraka answered, her anger subsiding, "but it is very strange. If it be so, and if all things should happen as we said, which Allah avert, and if you desired me for your wife, I would marry you without doubt. You are a great man, and rich, and you are good to look at, as Saad was. Also you are kind, but Saad would probably have beaten me, for he beat every one, every day, and I should have gone back to my father's house. Truly," she added, in a thoughtful tone, "you would make a desirable husband for Baraka. But the man I seek must marry me if I find him alive, for I gave him the riches of the earth and he gave me nothing and departed, leaving me to die. I have told you, and you understand. Therefore let us not jest about these things any more. What will be, will be, and if he must die, it is his portion, and mine also, though it is a pity."

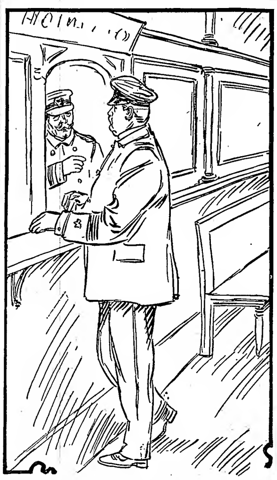
Thereupon the noble little features became very grave, and she leaned back in her chair and folded her hands in her lap, looking out at the violet light on the distant volcano. After that, at dinner and in the evening, they talked pleasantly. She told him tales of her own land, and of her childhood, with legends of the Altai, of genii and enchanted princesses; and he, in return, told her about the great world in which he lived; but of the two, she talked the more, no doubt because he was not speaking his own language. Yet there was a bond of sympathy between them more natural and instinctive than any that had ever drawn him and Margaret together.

When the sun was up the next morning and Logotheti came on deck to drink his coffee alone, he saw the magic straits not many miles ahead, in an opalescent haze that sent up a vapor of pure gold to the pale blue enamel of the sky. He had been just where he was now more than once before, and few sights of nature had ever given him keener delight. On the left, the beautiful outline of the Calabrian hills descended softly into the still sea, on the right the mountains of Sicily reared their lofty crests; and far above them all, twice as high as the highest, and nobler in form than the greatest, Etna towered to the very sky, and a vast cloud of smoke rose from the summit that streamed westward as far as the eye could reach.

"Let her go half speed, captain," said Logotheti, as his sailing-master came up to bid him good-morning. "I should like my guest to see the straits."

"Very good, sir. We shall not go through very fast in any case, for the tide is just turning against us."

"Never mind," Logotheti answered. "The slower the better to-day, till we have Etna well astern."



Captain Brown Got Information About the Erinna.

CHAPTER XV.

It was eight o'clock in the morning when the Lancashire Lass steamed slowly into Messina and dropped anchor out in the middle of the harbor to wait while Capt. Brown got information about the Erinna, if there were any to be had at the harbor-master's office. It would have been folly to run out of the straits without at least looking in to see if she were there, lying quietly moored behind the fortress of San Salvatore and the very high mole.

She was not there, and had not been heard of, but a Paris Herald was procured in which it was stated that the Erinna had arrived in Naples, "owner and party on board."

"Well," said Mr. Van Torp, "let's get to Naples, quick. How long will it take, captain?"

"About eight hours, sir, counting our getting under weigh and out of this crowded water, which won't take long, for the tide will soon turn."

"Go ahead," said Mr. Van Torp.

Capt. Brown prepared to get under weigh again as quickly as possible. The entrance to Messina harbor is narrow, and it was natural that, as he was in a hurry, a huge Italian man-of-war should enter the harbor at that very moment, with the solemn and safe deliberation which the movements of line-of-battle ships require when going in and out of port. There was nothing to be done but to wait patiently till the fairway was clear. It was not more than a quarter of an hour, but Capt. Brown was in a hurry, and as there was a fresh morning breeze blowing across the harbor he could not even get his anchor up with safety before he was ready to start.

The result of all these delays was that at about nine o'clock he saw the Erinna right ahead, bows on and only half a mile away, just between Scylla and Faro, where the whirlpool is still a danger to sailing vessels and slow steamers, and just as the tide was turning against her and in his own favor. He did not like to leave the bridge, even for a moment, and sent the second mate with an urgent message requesting Mr. Van Torp to come up as soon as he could.

Five minutes earlier the owner had sat down to breakfast opposite Lady Maud, who was very pale and had dark shadows under her eyes for the first time since he had known her. As soon as the steward left them alone, she spoke.

"It is Leven," she said, "and he wants me to take him back."

Mr. Van Torp set down his tea untasted and stared at her. He was not often completely taken by surprise, but for once he was almost speechless. His lips did not even move silently.

"I was sure it was he," Lady Maud said, "but I did not expect that."

"Well," said Mr. Van Torp, finding his voice, "he shan't. That's all."

"No. I told him so. If I had been dressed I would have asked you to put me ashore at Messina. I thought you were going to stop there—the stewardess told me where we were, but she knew nothing else—and now we're off again."

"I can't help it, Maud," said Van Torp, almost in a whisper, "I don't believe it. I don't believe in impossibilities like that beard of his. It may sound ridiculous in the face of your recognizing your own husband, but it's a solid fact, and you can't get over it. I wish I could catch the Erinna and show him to that Tartar girl. She'd know in a minute. He can't be her man and Leven, too. There's only one thing to be done that I can see."

"What?" asked Lady Maud sadly and incredulously.

"Tell him you'll take him back on condition that he'll shave."

Mr. Van Torp, who was in dead earnest, had just given his best friend this piece of sound practical advice when the door opened, though he had not rung, and the steward announced that the second mate had a message for Mr. Van Torp. He was admitted, and he delivered it.

The owner sprang to his feet.

"By thunder, we've caught 'em!" he cried, as he rushed out of the deck saloon.

Lady Maud leaned back and stared at his empty chair, wondering what was going to happen next.

This was what happened. The Lancashire Lass reversed her starboard engine with full speed astern, put her helm hard over to port, and turned back towards the straits in the smallest space possible for her, passing less than a cable's length from the Scylla rock, and nearly running down half a dozen fishing boats that pulled like mad to get out of her way; for they supposed that the steering-gear had broken down, unless her captain had gone raving mad.

While this was going on, Capt. Brown himself, with the international signal code in his hand, was calling out letters of the alphabet to a quartermaster, and before his ship had made half a circle the flags ran up the single stick the yacht carried.

"My owner has urgent business with your owner," was what the flags meant in plain English.

The Erinna was going slow, for Baraka was only just ready to come on deck, haste being in her opinion, an invention of Shaitan's. Logotheti, who wished her to see the straits, was just inside the door of the deck saloon, waiting for her to come out of her cabin. The officer of the watch read off the signals of the other yacht, ran up the answering pennant, and sent for the sailing-master, but could of course do nothing else without orders. So the Erinna continued to go slow. All this took some minutes, for the officer had naturally been obliged to look up the signal in the code before answering that he understood it; and in that time Van Torp's yacht had completed her turn and was nearly alongside. The Lancashire Lass slowed down to the Erinna's speed, and the two captains aimed their megaphones accurately at each other from their respective bridges for a little pleasant conversation. Capt. Brown, instructed by Mr. Van Torp at his elbow, repeated what his signals had meant. The other sailing-master answered that he had already informed his owner, who was coming to the bridge directly.

At that moment Logotheti appeared. There was not much more than a cable's length between the two yachts, which in land-talk means 200 yards. Van Torp also saw a slim young lady in blue serge, with a veil tied over her hair, leaning on the rail of the promenade deck and looking towards him. With his glasses he recognized the features of Baraka.

"Got 'em!" he ejaculated in a low but audible tone of intense satisfaction.

Logotheti had also seen Van Torp, and waved his hand in a friendly manner.

"Ask the gentleman if he'll come aboard, captain," said the American. "I can't talk through your cornopean anyway. I suppose we can send the naphtha launch for him if we stop, can't we?"

"Can't stop here," answered Capt. Brown. "The currents might jam us into each other, and we should most likely get aground in any case. This is not even a safe place for going slow, when the tide is running."

"Well, you know your business, and I don't. Tell him we don't want to interfere with any arrangements he's made, and that if he'll kindly set the pace he likes we'll trot along behind him till we get to a nice place, somewhere where we can stop. I suppose he can't run away from us now, can he?"

Capt. Brown smiled the smile of a man who commands a 23-knot boat, and proceeded to deliver the message in a more concise form. Logotheti heard every word, and the answer was that he was in no hurry and was quite at Mr. Van Torp's disposal. He would be glad to know whom the latter had on board with him.

"Lady Maud Leven, Miss Margaret Donne, Mrs. Rushmore and Count Kralinsky," answered Capt. Brown, prompted by Van Torp.

The latter was watching the Greek through a pair of deer-stalking glasses and saw distinctly the expression of surprise that came into his face when he heard the last of the names.

"Tell the gentleman," said Van Torp, "that if he'll bring his party with him when we stop, I'll be very glad to have them all take lunch with me."

Capt. Brown delivered the message. At such a short distance he did not even have to raise his voice to be heard through the six-foot megaphone.

To Van Torp's surprise, Logotheti nodded with alacrity, and the answer came that he would bring his party with pleasure, but thought that his visit would be over long before luncheon time.

"All right, good-by," said Van Torp, as if he were at the telephone. "Ring off, captain. That's all. Just let him give us a lead now and we'll follow him through this creek again, since you say you can't stop here."

As he went off the bridge to return to his breakfast he passed close to the chief mate, who had turned again, though it was his watch below.

"I say, Mr. Johnson," he asked, "have we got a barber shop on board this ship?"

"No, sir," answered the mate, who knew better than to be surprised at anything.

"It's no matter," said Mr. Van Torp, "I was only asking."

He went back to his breakfast with an improved appetite. When he re-entered the saloon Lady Maud was still leaning back in her chair, staring at his empty place.

"Well," he said, "they're both coming on board as soon as we get to a place where we can stop."

"Have you really seen the girl?" Lady Maud sat up, as if she were waking from sleep.

"Oh, yes! There she was, looking over the rail, as neat as a pin, in a blue serge dress, with a white veil tied over her hair, watching me. We've got 'em right enough, and that's going to be the end of this mystery!"

"Did you see any one else on the yacht?"

"Logo. That's all. He and I talked. At least, our captains talked for us. They do know how to yell, those men! If the girl's the party, Logo beats the band for brass, that's all I can say!"

"It is rather cool," said Lady Maud thoughtfully. "If he's alone with her, it will be all up with his engagement."

They talked a few minutes longer, agreeing that she should tell Margaret what was going to happen; but that Mrs. Rushmore and Kralinsky should be kept in ignorance of the plan, the American lady because she might possibly yield to temptation and tell the count, and the latter for obvious reasons. It was not likely that any of them would be on deck much before Logotheti came on board.

There is good anchorage out of the tidal current at Scaletta, some few miles below Messina, on the Sicilian side, and towards this well-known water the Erinna led the way, followed at a short distance by the Lancashire Lass.

Logotheti and Baraka watched her, the girl recognizing Van Torp on the bridge of his yacht, without even using glasses, for she had eyes like an eagle's, and the American millionaire stood alone at one end of the bridge looking towards her.

Logotheti had told her that Kralinsky was on board, and that she should see him as soon as both yachts could anchor. He explained that it was an unforeseen coincidence, and that Mr. Van Torp must have taken him on board somewhere on the previous day. To the Greek's surprise, Baraka showed no outward sign of emotion. He had promised to take her to the man, and had said that he was near at hand; that the meeting should take place sooner than had been intended hardly surprised her, because she had been so perfectly sure that it was near. Her only preoccupation now was about her appearance in her ready-made serge and blouse, when she had meant to show herself to Kralinsky in the glory of a beautiful and expensive Feringhi dress.

But Logotheti explained that even the richest Feringhi ladies often wore little blue serge frocks on yachts, and told her to watch the Lancashire Lass with her glasses, as there were three very great Feringhi ladies on board, and she might see one, and he reassured; and presently she saw Lady Maud walking alone on the promenade deck, in clothes very like her own, excepting that they were black instead of dark blue. So Baraka was satisfied, but she never took her eyes from the following yacht, for she hoped that Kralinsky would come out and show himself.

All at once he was there, taking off his white cap to Lady Maud, and they stood still facing each other, and talking.

"I see him," Baraka said in a low voice, without lowering her glasses. "It is he."

Logotheti, who had been much absorbed in thinking about his coming interview with Margaret, raised his glasses, too, for he was curious to see the man at last. He had known Leven for years, though never intimately, as he knew a vast number of people in London, and he was struck at once by the resemblance in size, build and complexion.

"He is fatter than he was, and paler," Baraka said quietly, "but it is he. He is speaking earnestly with the beautiful woman in black. I can see well. He likes her, but she does not like him. I think she is telling him so. I am so glad. But she is more beautiful than Baraka, even in those clothes. When he sees me, he will deny me, because he likes the beautiful woman in black. I will tell Spiro to be ready. It is a pity, but I see there will be no other way. It is his portion and mine. It is a great pity, for I have been happy with you."

Instead of any look of anger, Logotheti now saw an expression of profound resignation in her lovely young features. If he had been less anxious about his own affairs, he would have smiled at her simplicity.

"When we are on that ship you will let me talk with him a little apart from the rest, and Spiro shall go behind him and wait, looking at me. If he denies me, I will make a sign, and Spiro shall shoot him, and then kill me. It will be very easy and quick."

"And what will become of Spiro?" inquired Logotheti gravely.

"I do not know," Baraka said quietly. "Perhaps he will lose his head. How can I tell? But he is a good servant, and will obey me. Afterwards it will not matter, for he is really a Mussulman, and will go at once to paradise if he dies, because he has killed a Christian."

"But you are a Mussulman, and he is to kill you also. What about that?"

"I am only a woman," answered Baraka with supreme indifference. "Now I will call Spiro and tell him what he is to do. He has a good revolver."

Logotheti let her clap her hands and send the steward for her man, and she rose when he appeared and made him follow her a little way along the deck. The interview did not last long. She handed him her glasses and made him look carefully at the intended victim; then she apparently repeated her brief instructions again, pointing here and there to the deck at her feet, to show him how they were to stand; after which she turned quietly, came back to Logotheti's side and sat down again.

"He understands," she said. "It will be quite easy."

But Logotheti, looking past her as she came forward, had met Spiro's eyes; and he felt not even the slightest anxiety for Kralinsky's safety, nor for Baraka's. He was still wondering what he should say to Margaret.

At a distance, Logotheti had supposed that he could somehow account to the diva for the position in which he had foolishly placed himself, because he had done nothing and said nothing that he would have been ashamed of before her, if she knew the whole truth; and he fancied that even if they quarreled she would make up with him before long, and marry him in the end. He had a good opinion of himself as a desirable husband; and with reason, since he had been persecuted for years with offers of excellent marriages from mothers of high degree who had daughters to dispose of. And beneath that conviction there lurked, in spite of him, the less worthy thought, that singers and actresses were generally less squeamish than women of the world about the little entanglements of their intended husbands.

Niceties of Legal Tender

Somewhat Perplexing Question Which Very Few Seem to Properly Understand.

One of the prominent officials of the treasury department recently ventured the opinion that not one banker in a hundred and probably not half a dozen members of the senate or house could tell accurately what parts of the United States currency are legal tender. He went on to say:

"A great many people know that the definition of legal tender is money of a character which by law a debtor may require his creditor to receive in payment in the absence of a special agreement. But when it comes to stating just what money is legal tender you will find the banker all at sea.

"Gold certificates are not a legal tender, but are receivable for customs, taxes and all public debts. Silver certificates are not legal tender. Neither are national bank notes. They are receivable, however, in payment of taxes, excises, public lands and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports. Trade dollars and fractional currency are not legal tender. Fractional currency is receivable for postage and revenue stamps and also in payment of any dues to the United States less than five dollars, except duties on imports. Foreign gold and silver coins are not legal tender.

"The following are legal tender in all that the term means:

"Gold coins of the United States, standard silver dollars, subsidiary silver coins, minor coin of copper, bronze or copper-nickel, up to 25 cents; United States notes or greenbacks, demand treasury notes, treasury notes of 1890. Columbian half dollar and Columbian quarters. Subsidiary silver coin, including Columbian half dollars and quarters, are legal tender up to $10."

Queer Legal Oaths.

In Siberia in the wild Ostayake law courts, the natives swear by the newly-severed head of a bear, which is implored to subsequently rend and devour them should they perjure themselves; whilst in Assam the opposing witnesses lay hold of a chicken by its feet and retain each one half as the clerk of the court chops it in two.

By undergoing this ceremony they are considered to be pledged to a like fate in the event of their swearing falsely.

By Inference.

WESTEN CANADA AS A GRAIN PRODUCER

NEVER SAW SUCH FINE WHEAT ANYWHERE.

Gust. Anderson of Maidstone, Sask, was formerly of Minnesota and has been in Central Canada three years. On January 16, 1910, he writes:

"Arriving fifteen miles from Maidstone, I bought a couple of steers from a rancher, as my capital was not large, and with the two oxen I brought with me, I broke 25 acres which I put in crop in 1908 and had to clear some brush. I earned $45.00 by breaking fifteen acres for a neighbor and during the summer I put up hay and hauled timber and put up houses for other settlers. Notwithstanding a heavy frost on August 12th, I had 22½ bushels of wheat per acre and 60 bushels of oats. Off 35 acres of wheat in 1909, I got 27 bushels of wheat per acre and 1,300 bushels of oats off 20 acres. I never saw such fine wheat anywhere. We have plenty of rain between May and August and after August seldom any but dry warm days. Water can be had at from 20 to 40 feet and plenty of grass for cattle."

The evidence of Mr. Anderson is given because it is encouraging to the man of small means who is desirous of bettering his condition. It shows what can be done, and there is really but small limit to the man with push and energy to become wealthy on Canadian lands. And the grain that he raises is good. A press dispatch says:

The quality of the wheat continues to be the feature of the deliveries. In the total of 3,378 cars in the February inspections there were 2,847 of high grade stuff, a percentage of 84.28. For January the percentage was 82.21, and for the six months it was 88.6. This is an unusually high average, and it demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt that the farmers in this part of the Dominion still know how to grow first-class wheat. The crop of 1908 was considered good enough, and its average of contract wheat was only 70 per cent. Good weather throughout the season was an important factor, of course, in insuring the high quality of the grain, and it is not likely that atmospheric influences of so favorable a character will be encountered for a long time to come. The best that can be expected is that a fair average for a term of years will be maintained.

SAW CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY

Unreasonable Attitude of His Friend Naturally Disgusted Man of Business.

Solomon and Moses, while walking by the canal, saw a notice board which stated that five shillings would be paid to whoever rescued another man from drowning.

It didn't take them more than a minute to arrange that one should fall in and be saved by the other, and the "stakes" divided.

In went Sol, and found it rather deeper than he expected. However, he splashed about, crying:

"Come on, Moses! Save me!"

Moses hesitated.

"Sol," he said, "I've been reading that notice board again, and it says, 'Ten shillings for a dead body.' Now, do be reasonable."—London Tit-Bits.

Not Quite.

"Young man," inquired her father, sternly, "will you give her a home like the one she has been used to?"

"No," replied the truthful suitor, "for there will be no grumpy father to come home and make everyone miserable by his kicking over trifles and swearing at matters in general. There will be no mother to scold her from morning to night for wasting time merely because she wants to be neat. There will be no big brother to abuse her for not doing half of his work, and no little brother to make enough noise to drive her crazy when her head aches. There won't be any younger sister to insist on reading some trashy novel while she does all the work. She will not have with me a home like she has been used to, not if I can help it."—Puck.

Why She Permitted It.

"Why did you ever permit your husband to buy a flimsy, rickety automobile like that?"

"He recently got himself heavily insured against accidents."

Every man who owns a single share of stock in a $1,000,000 corporation thinks he could run it better than the general manager does.

POSTUM FOR MOTHERS

The Drink That Nourishes and Supplies Food for Mother and Child.

"My husband had been unable to drink coffee for several years, so we were very glad to give Postum a trial and when we understood that long boiling would bring out the delicious flavour, we have been highly pleased with it.

"It is one of the finest things for nursing mothers that I have ever seen. It keeps up the mother's strength and increases the supply of nourishment for the child if partaken of freely. I drank it between meals instead of water and found it most beneficial.

"Our five-year-old boy has been very delicate since birth and has developed slowly. He was white and bloodless. I began to give him Postum freely and you would be surprised at the change. When any person remarks about the great improvement, we never fail to tell them that we attribute his gain in strength and general health, to the free use of Postum and this has led many friends to use it for themselves and children.

"I have always cautioned friends to whom I have spoken about Postum, to follow directions in making it, for unless it is boiled fifteen or twenty minutes, it is quite tasteless. On the other hand, when properly made, it is very delicious. I want to thank you for the benefits we have derived from the use of your Postum."

Some folks see a notable Republican victory in the election of Mayor Keller at St. Paul. To the informed, however, it is only an indication that Billy Hamm has changed his allegiance.

Sentor Hanson has made the expected announcement of his candidacy for re-election. With two candidates from Beltrami county in the field it would seem as though the chances favored Hanson.

King George V is the new king of England and the British Empire. But the king is a good deal of a figurehead, and no one seems to know or care whether or not he has distinguished qualifications for the job.

The census bureau estimate is that Minnesota will have a population of 2,250,000, a gain of nearly half a million in the decade. Nearly five-sixths o this growth is in the twin cities and the northern part of the state.

A Wisconsin automobile manufacturer died last week leaving an estate of $2,000,000. This will easily be understood by the man who paid $3000 for a machine and then sold it in order to keep up with the times by investing $7000 in a new one.

Mankato is the first city in Minnesota to adopt the commission form of government, and an election is to be held next week to elect the first board of commissioners. Senator S. D. Works who will deliver the commencement address in Red Lake Falls, is the author of the bill authorizing this change in the form of municipal government and to him belongs the glory for the sentiment created in his home town for the new era.

"Elder" Stewart, one of the eccentric characters of Minneapolis died last week and leaves an estate variously from six to fifteen millions. Mr. Stewart's habits were peculiar, and he was universally regarded as a miser, but since his death many instances of acts of charity performed unostentatiously have come to light, and it is expected that practically all of his vast fortune will ultimately go to public and private charity.

The Browns Valley Tribune says that "some politicians seem to think that the only things they should publicly favor when seeking an important office is good weather, good crops for the farmers, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year." This is the kind of a platform that many candidates who see breakers ahead would like to see adopted. And if they could guarantee its fulfillment it would be a happy solution for our political difficulties.

The Litchfield News-Ledger makes this wholesome suggestion: Why not confine the duties of the president of the senate and the speaker of the house strictly to that of presiding officer. Let a committee from each branch of the legislature, comprising a member from each judicial district, be named by each body as a whole immediately after the convening of the legislature and this committee recommend all standing committees, subject to the approval of their respective houses.

The sudden death of King Edward has cast a gloom over the civilized world. He was a good king, as kings go, and was broader-gaged than any previous ruler of the British empire. There are grave fears that his son, King George, is not the diplomat or politician as was his father, and the English people, especially in the colonies, are disposed to resent dictatorship and petty impositions. There is a possibility that George may be the last king of England, and that a democratic government in keeping with the spirit of the Magna Charta may supersede the present monarchial form—for it is a form, pure and simple, and the king is largely a figurehead and a pleasant fiction.

The Montevideo Leader makes this criticism of recent railroad legislation: "Years ago we heard a great deal about the long and short haul and there was a great deal of legislation proposed and some enacted to protect the people against the discriminating practices of the railroads whereby they gave the benefits to the large centers regardless of distance and the smaller inland towns suffer in consequence. We cannot see that there has been very much accomplished in the interest of the country towns as a result of that legislation. The railroads do just as they please and the state government railroad commissioners do not seem to care. There is the rankest kind of discrimination going on and the country towns continue to get it in the neck"

ALL DRUGGISTS

Fairmont Sentinel says that an article in the current number of Hampton's Magazine shows plainly that regardless of the facts brought out at the hearing, Ballinger is to be whitewashed. It is shown that a majority of those appointed on the investigating committee are either directly interested in some of the Alaskan grabs or are attorneys for the corporations which are trying to get possession of everything worth $1 in the territory. It does not spare Taft, it being made apparant that he is serving the interests, though it gives him credit for being hood-winked by the schemers. Even our own Senator Nelson, chairman of the committee, is not free from a shadow. The gang of exploiters have named a town in Alaska after him to make him feel good, of course.

But the bosses will wake up in the morning of the 9th of next November to find that the people have forgotten to a great extent, that there ever was a Republican party.

St. Cloud Times: Minnesota is pretty well fixed financially its credit is A1, its warrants at par and its money box bursting with dollars. It has on hand the tidy little sum of $3,360,000. This is $1,220,000 more than the state had at the corresponding time last year The increase is due largely to the gain in the railroad receipts. The receipts from the railroads this year so far are $7,442,400.05. Last year they were $22,072,592.55. The day is approaching when the railroads will pay in sufficient to defray all the expenses of the state proper.

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Rheumatism is a specific blood fermentation, a souring of the circulation from an excess of uric acid accumulating in the blood stream. This uratic impurity comes usually as a result of constipation, weak kidneys, indigestion and stomach disturbances. These systemic irregularities may not be of marked severity or of long duration, but each has a direct effect on the eliminative members of the body, which prevents the proper removal of the waste products. This refuse remains in the stomach and bowels, and souring forms uric acid, which the blood quickly absorbs.

Rheumatism is usually manifested in the joints and muscles. It is here its sharpest twinges of pain are felt, and stiffening of ligaments and tendons first commence. The pain of Rheumatism is caused by the contact of the sensory nerves with the gritty, acrid formation which uric acid causes to accumulate in the corpuscles of the blood about the joints. The stiffening of muscles and joints is usually gradual. Constantly the blood deposits the uric acid into the joints, and slowly the natural fluids are dried up and destroyed. Then Rheumatism becomes chronic and serious. Rheumatism is sometimes inherited, for like all blood diseases it can be transmitted to offspring. This explains why some persons are afflicted with the disease, and suffer its pains, who have otherwise been perfectly healthy.

S.S.S. cures Rheumatism and cures it permanently. It goes into the circulation, and removes the uric acid, purifies the blood, and in this way destroys the cause. S. S. S. changes the blood from a sour, acid-steeped stream to a rich, healthy fluid, which quiets the excited nerves, eases the throbbing muscles and painful joints, and filters out of the circulation the irritating matter which causes every painful symptom of the disease. When the blood has been purified and enriched by S.S.S., it nourishes the different members that have been weakened and starved because of imperfect blood. RHEUMATISM FORTY YEARS.

I suffered with lumbago for a long time, and speaking of it to a friend one day he told me to try S. S. S. I did so, and soon found it was helping me. I had rheumatism for more than forty years, having contracted it in the army, but S. S. S cured me sound and well, and have had no return of the trouble. I think S.S.S. has no equal for curing rheumatism.

The Elder 2:15 1-2, by Trustmont-Minnie R.

Owned by Thomas Whalen, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

About three years ago, at the Tri-State Fair, at Sioux City, Iowa, there was an especially strong field of green pacers in the 2:27 class, and after the first two heats had been reeled off in 2:10½, each won by Pat C., the Alcantarus mare, Miss Terrace, won the third heat in 2:11 and finally won the race. The Minnesota horse, The Elder, was close up in all five heats and won third money in this race. The following year he took a record of 2.15½ over the Hamline track during the Minnesota State Fair. As will be seen by the illustration, The Elder is a horse of fine individuality and has shown himself to have plenty of speed. His sire is Trustmont, 16926, a son of Piedmont, 2:17¼. His dam was the well known trotting mare, Minnie R., 2:29¼, who took her record at Fargo, N. D., some twelve years ago, and was by Cyclone, a son of Colonna, 4635, that the late Dr. S. C. Curryor brought to Minnesota in the early days. Colonna, a brother of Nutwood, was a son of Belmont and his dam was Lady McKinney, the dam of Nil Desperandum, 2:24. In view of the fact that the sire of The Elder was out of a daughter of Messenger Duroc, 106, and that his second dam was by America Star, 14, it will be seen that The Elder has inheritance of the stoutest kind of trotting blood. The horse is owned by Thomas Whalen, Red Lake Falls, Minnesota. He was bred by Alex Faulkner, of Hutchinson, Minn., and was trained and raced by Frank Avery of the same place.—The Horseman and Stockman.

Civilization and Missions.

There is a question that is larger than government or trade, and that is the moral well-being of the vast millions who have come under the protection of modern governments. The representative of the Christian religion must have his place side by side with the man of government and trade, and for generations that representative must be supplied in the person of the foreign missionary from America and Europe. Civilization can only be permanent and continue a blessing to any people if, in addition to promoting their material well-being, it also stands for an orderly individual liberty, for the growth of intelligence and for equal justice in the administration of law. Christianity alone meets these fundamental requirements. The change of sentiment in favor of the foreign missionary in a single generation has been remarkable.

Evidently Not.

They had met at Bluepoint, L. I., two years before and were celebrating it by a little dinner at a cafe.

"I shall never forget how we became acquainted," he was saying. "So romantic. In swimming. That was when I first saw you. You went into three feet of water and got frightened. I rescued you from a watery grave and we were friends at once." He called the waiter. "Bring me the wine list," he said, explaining: "Because we began our acquaintance in a watery way, it needn't always be watery."

Getting Old.

"Was your wife pleased with that birthday gift you took home last night?"

"Delighted! She said that I didn't seem to have a thing to do but to sit around and remember her birthdays."

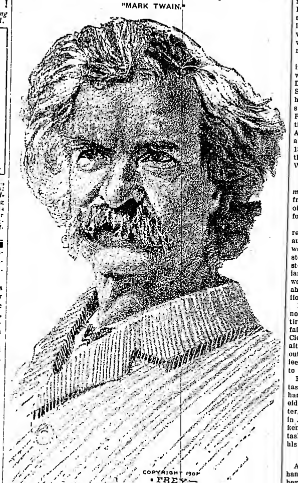
SAMUEL LANGHORNE CLEMENS

"MARK TWAIN."



DEATH OF "MARK TWAIN," THE GREAT AMERICAN HUMORIST.

Early Struggles and Adventures, Followed by Years of Successful Literary Work--Later Days Saddened by Deaths and Financial Reverses.

Redding, Connecticut. — Samuel Langhorn Clemens, "Mark Twain," died painlessly of angina pectoris. He lapsed into coma at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and never recovered consciousness.

It was the end of a man outworn by grief and acute agony of body.

Wednesday was a bad day for the little knot of anxious watchers at the bedside. For long hours the grey, aquiline features lay mounded in the inertia of death, while the pulse sank lower and lower, but late at night Mark Twain passed from stupor into the first natural sleep he had known since he returned from Bermuda and he woke refreshed, even faintly cheerful, and in full possession of all his faculties.

He recognized his daughter, Clara (Mrs. Ossip Gabrilovitch), spoke a rational word or two and feeling himself unequal to conversation wrote out in pencil: "Give me my glasses."

They were his last words.

Laying them aside he sank first into reverie and later into final unconsciousness.

Samuel Langhorne Clemens, America's foremost humorist and known the world over as "Mark Twain" was born in the little town of Hannibal, Mo., on November 30, 1835.

His father, John Marshall Clemens, came from an old Virginia family, and with his young wife, Elizabeth Lampton, a descendant of the early settlers of Kentucky, he joined the sturdy band of pioneers who pushed over the Alleghanies in the early part of the last century and settled along the banks of the Mississippi river.

In the uncouth environment of the then little frontier town of Hannibal the famous author spent his boyhood days. Here he fished, hunted and lounged along the river banks with his sturdy companions, living a healthy outdoor existence, which undoubtedly accounted for his long life, in the face of his many afflictions.

He attended the little school, but not being of a very studious disposition, he learned far more from contact with the rough companions whom he immortalized in later years as "Huckleberry Finn" and "Tom Sawyer," and others of their type.

The life of a steamboat pilot had always appealed to his youthful imagination, and now that he had grown to manhood, he resolved to realize his ambition. He was fortunate enough to become a pupil of Horace Bixby, and he was soon guiding the awkward river craft along the tortuous channel of the muddy stream.

The idea of his becoming an author had never entered his mind at that time, but he absorbed enough of the pilot life to enable him to describe the difficulties encountered in guiding a boat along the great river in his "Life on the Mississippi River," which he wrote many years later.

In 1862 he began his first regular literary work on the staff of the Virginia City Enterprise. He wrote a column daily, dealing with the political situation in the state, that attracted wide attention. These articles he signed with the nom de plume "Mark Twain," which he had heard sung out on the Mississippi steamers to let the pilot know that the sounding showed two fathoms of water.

In March of 1867, "Twain" published his first book, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County." The book made quite a stir in that part of the country, but only 4,000 copies were sold. It attracted the attention, however, of the editor of the Alta California, who sent the author out as a newspaper correspondent on a steamboat excursion to southern Europe and the Orient.

His letters were published from time to time, and in 1869 the author revised them and published them in book form under the title of "The Innocents Abroad." This work made "Mark Twain" famous and compelled his recognition as America's foremost humorist. In the first 16 months, 85,000 volumes were sold, and many more subsequently. This was a record sale for those days.

Marries Miss Langdon.

It was on his trip in the Mediterranean that "Mark Twain" met Olivia L. Langdon of Elmira, N. Y. They fell in love with each other, and in 1870 were married. Their married life was one of perfect harmony and four children blessed their union.

Mr. Clemens resided in Buffalo for a year after his marriage, and was nominally the editor of the Buffalo Express. In 1871 he joined the literary colony at Hartford, Conn., where he lived for a great many years, and where he did the greater part of the work that has made his name immortal.

In 1872 "Roughing It" appeared, and in the same year "The Gilded Age," written in collaboration with Charles Dudley Warner, was published. "Tom Sawyer" came in 1876, and "Huckleberry Finn" nine years later. Of the stories with an historical setting "The Prince and the Pauper," "A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," and "Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc," appeared in 1882, 1890 and 1894 respectively. In 1893 that curious philosopher, "Pudd'nhead Wilson," made his bow.

Misfortune Dogs Him.

But while the great humorist was meeting with well-deserved success from a literary standpoint, the imps of misfortune seemed to dog his very footsteps.

In 1884 he conceived the idea of reaping the publisher's as well as the author's profits from some of his works. Accordingly he organized a stock company known as C. L. Webster & Co., in which he was the largest stockholder, to publish his works. He had accumulated considerable wealth and was rated as a millionaire.

His financial ability, however, was none of the best, and in 1894 his entire fortune was swept away by the failure of the publishing house. Mr. Clemens was abroad at the time, and although 60 years of age, he started out on a tour of the globe, delivering lectures and writing articles in order to pay the debts of the defunct firm.

He had scarcely begun his great task when fate struck him another hard blow. This was the death of his eldest and most accomplished daughter, Miss Olivia S. Clemens, who died in August, 1896, at the age of 24. Broken in spirit, he continued his great task and in two years he had paid off his debts.

Wife Passes Away.

As if in sympathy with her husband's misfortunes, his wife's health began to fail. He moved to Florence, Italy, in the hope that the mild climate would restore her, but it proved of no avail, and on November 6, 1904, she died in that far off land.

About this time the humorist met H. H. Rogers, the Standard Oil magnate, and the men became fast friends. Rogers gave his literary friend the aid of his financial experience, and Clemens was soon in possession of a comfortable income.

And now misfortune selected another weapon with which to attack the white-haired author. Heretofore his books had escaped harsh criticisms, but in November, 1907, "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn," his boy masterpieces, were withheld from youths by the Brooklyn public libraries, as "unfit for young minds." Comptroller Joy of Detroit, Mich., declared his work, "A Double-Barrelled Detective Story," was "literary junk, unfit for a public library," and a Massachusetts public library refused to give shelf room to his "Eve's Diary," declaring that the book was "shocking."

Worn out by his lectures, after dinner speeches and misfortunes, "Twain" purchased a farm in Redding, Conn., and erected a $40,000 villa, which he called "Stormfield." With his two daughters, Clara and Jean, he moved there in 1908, and settled down to a life of ease.

But a series of fresh misfortunes was in store for him. He had vigorously denounced the rule of the late King Leopold II. in the Kongo Free State, and just when the reform movement was at its height, his ill health compelled him to abandon his work.

The "Children's Theater," which was founded by "Mark Twain" in New York, and which represented one of his life-long ambitions, was forced to close through lack of funds.

Then the humorist and his daughter Clara became involved in a lawsuit over a farm which he had presented to his former secretary, Mrs. Ralph Ashcroft, on her wedding day; and which he later attached on the advice of his daughter.

The facts regarding this disagreeable affair were aired in the press, much to the humiliation of the veteran humorist.

In the early part of 1909 his staunch friend and adviser, H. H. Rogers, died suddenly at his New York home. This great financier and the white haired humorist had been inseparable companions for a number of years. They had made trips to Bermuda together, and when Rogers opened his railroad in Virginia, "Twain" was one of the guests of honor. The author was greatly affected by the financier's sudden death.

In the latter part of 1909, "Twain" made another trip to Bermuda, and on his return his feeble appearance attracted a great deal of attention. Then the last crushing blow came the day before Christmas, when his youngest daughter, Jean, was found dead in the bath tub at his Redding home. The young woman had been a victim of epileptic fits.

Fatal Flaw in His Theory

Dr. Gulick's Arguments for Matrimonial Felicity Overturned by Application of Logic.

When Dr. Luther H. Gulick, of certain honorable connection with the Russell Sage foundation, allows himself to speculate fondly on the possible domestic felicities which might result from the adoption of a masculine style of dress buttoning up the back instead of the front, he forgets an important particular. That relates to the time when it required more than the services of what is known now to wives as a "kind hooker" to get the head of the family into his togs—when a couple of squires, an armorer, a tinsmith and a blacksmith or two were needed to equip one helmeted man for his day's work, with the fair wife on the side to get the helmet on straight and to strap the laced one's sword about his manly waist.

Dr. Gulick will be sensible of his own confusion when he recalls that this co-operation did not make for the perfect domestic tranquillity so much as he desired in perfectly respectable communities. He will admit he was in error in his theory that if the husband were as dependent on the wife in the matter of hooks as the wife is dependent on him—or maid or neighbor—there would be fewer divorces.

PLEASES SCHURMAN

Believes Congress Should Grant Request for National Charter—Would Change Only One Small Detail.

Ithaca, N. Y. — In an address before the Council congress on Friday night President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell commended the scheme for the Rockefeller foundation for which congress has been asked for a national charter. President Schurman devoted his entire speech of several thousand words to this subject and in summing up he said:

"I recognize that section No. 2 of the bill, which defines the object of the Rockefeller foundation, authorizes and empowers that foundation to do anything and everything which may promote and advance human civilization, that is to say, morals and religion, art and science, manners and social intercourse, and all that concerns the political, economic, and material well being of individuals and communities. This is a vast field for the exercise of philanthropy.

"But Mr. Rockefeller has conceived a vast scheme of philanthropy, for the benefit of his fellow citizens and mankind. His character, ability and organizing skill are adequate guarantees that he will carry out his schemes wisely and successfully, with incalculable benefit and blessing to mankind. It is in the interest of the nation that he be given a free hand in the exercise of his colossal beneficence. So long as he is active or his influence remains it would be wise and safe to give the foundation the sort of organization he desires. Neither now nor hereafter does it seem necessary to limit the scope of his beneficence, which is coextensive with the efforts of mankind to attain a higher civilization.

"The only change I would desire to see in the proposed bill is the total or partial elimination of the method of selecting trustees by co-operation. The organization might well be left a close corporation, if Mr. Rockefeller so desires, for a generation. But after that time I am confident that it would inure both to the efficiency of the foundation and to the public welfare—to say nothing of the satisfaction of the sentiment of a democracy—if the majority of the trustees were appointed by the president of the United States, with the advice and consent of the senate, or selected by some other high abiding governmental agencies that may fairly be regarded as representing the people of the United States, whose welfare is the primary object of the immense and glorious benefaction."

AIRSHIP RUNS AWAY TO DOOM

Zeppelin II., Belonging to German Army Post, is Wrecked in Gale.

Limburg-an-der-Lahn.—The Zeppelin II., one of the three dirigible balloons of the German government's aerial fleet, ran away and was destroyed. The airship, which was forced to descend here, owing to a storm, encountered whilst attempting a return trip from Homburg to Cologne, broke its moorings and without a crew drifted in a northeasterly direction. A half hour after its escape the dirigible dropped at Weilburg and was smashed to pieces.

Prairie City, Ia. — Suspected of having exploded dynamite which tore almost to atoms the magnificent $12,000 residence of Jesse A. Quick, wealthy farmer, three miles east, Miss Mary Guthrie of Carthage, Ill., has been arrested.

Occupants of the house escaped injury. In the home were Dr. Alexander Hall of Colfax, a former suitor of Miss Guthrie, and his bride, formerly Miss Myrtle Quick.

At one time Miss Guthrie and Dr. Hall were engaged to be married.

LIMBURGER AND THE LAW

Odorous Compound Responsible for Some Trouble and a Little Alleged "Wit."

"Technically," said Judge Wells to William Rung in the municipal court, "you had the right on your side. However, you chose a form of cruel and unusual punishment that cannot be tolerated by this court. I'll have to fine you one dollar."

It appeared from the evidence that Mr. Rung, who is a stereotyper, sat down to luncheon with Edward Snider, a fellow employe. The piece de resistance of Rung's luncheon consisted of limburger cheese, and Snider, who regards himself as something of a wag, had made certain remarks about the cheese, reflecting particularly on its odor. Thereupon Mr. Rung smeared a piece of the cheese over the humorous Snider's countenance.

"This," said Rung, as he stepped up to pay his fine, "is the kind of justice that smells to heaven."

"That will be about all from you," said the court bailiff; "cheese it!"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Have Their Troubles.

"Children should be protected from other evils besides the one evil of wage slavery, for, when free as air, they have enough trouble, dear knows.

"Walking along an East side street, I came on two tiny tots, the smaller of whom was bawling as if to break his lungs.

"A window opened and a little girl shrieked:

"'Tommy, who's been a-hittin' of ye?'

"'Nobody's been a-hittin' of him,' the larger tot answered. 'He's awallered a worm.'"

Another Instance.

"If you would only cut out the booze," he growled, "and pass up the crap and dice and the handbook thing, you wouldn't have to be touching your friends for a grub-stake so regularly."

"Ah! You're like so many others, my Philistine friend," sighed the Lightning Calculator; "it seems impossible for you to understand the eccentricities of genius!"—Los Angeles Herald.

DRIP! DROP! SPLASH!

There's that old roof leaking again. The wind got busy and blew off a few shingles and now the only thing to be done is to put the dishpan under the leak and catch the drip, drop and splash. The plaster is down in patches and the walls are ruined. Cheer up, though—You're going to get a new roof of GAL-VA-NITE that won't leak summer or winter—rain or snow. It never needs painting or patching, won't rot, rust or warp and lasts for ever. Any handy man can put it on and then we won't have any more of the grief of leaky roofs and the annoyance of drip, drop and splash.

GAL-VA-NITE comes in rolls complete and all ready to be put on. The secret of its ability to withstand the elements lies in the fact that it is waterproofed with three coats of mineral asphalt and weatherproofed with an "armor-plating" of flaked mica.

Tea Time Talks

It's always tea time when you are tired or thirsty.

The Teapot Test

The final proof of "Salada" superiority is in the teapot test. If "Salada" Ceylon Tea does not prove superior in fragrance, flavor and refreshing qualities, then the tea has not been properly prepared.

The teapot, having been scalded clean, put in a teaspoonful of tea for every two cups. Pour on freshly boiled (bubbling) water and allow tea to brew five minutes before serving. If tea has to be kept longer than five minutes, pour the liquor off the leaves into another warm teapot.

You'll get the most delicious cup of tea you ever tasted.

Stop Women And Consider

This Fact—that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers twenty-five years.

The present Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, was for years under her direction, and has ever since her decease continued to advise women.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty causes them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. Such questioning and examination is unnecessary. Without cost you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established this confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Never has she published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which Mrs. Pinkham has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge needed in your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Mrs. Pinkham, care of Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

ROOTS THAT NEEDED SOAKING

Pat at Least Told the Exact Truth in His Application for Whisky.

The town of Dedham is under prohibition law, apothecaries alone being permitted to sell alcoholic stimulants. The other day a son of the Emerald Isle entered a drug store there, and, taking a bottle from his pocket, asked for a quart of whisky. The salesman asked to what use it was to be put, and the reply was:

"To soak roots in it."

The order was filled, and the clerk, while handing over the bottle and its contents, inquired, in a conversational manner:

"What kind of roots are you going to soak?"

Pocketing the bottle, the customer said:

"The roots of my tongue, be jabers!"—Vermont Storyette (1886).

Pennsylvanian's Lapse of Memory.

Forgetting that he had started to draw a gallon of whisky from a barrel in the cellar, A. C. Hidlay, proprietor of the Hotel Hidlay, Bloomsburg, Pa., left the spigot turned on and went up to talk. Two hours later he remembered it and hastened there. He found that it had all run away and into the sewer. His loss because of his lapse of memory will be about [illegible]—From the Philadelphia Record.

Country people make their own jam, but people in the city get theirs in the street car.

A Real Prodigy.

"So you think your boy is a prodigy? But every man thinks his own son is the most wonderful being that ever breathed."

"I tell you this youngster is remarkable, no matter how you may sneer. I've seen him do a thing that I don't suppose any other boy of his age could possibly do."

"What's his specialty? Mathematics?"

"Mathematics? I should say not. He hasn't any more of a head for figures than I have, and learning the multiplication table was the hardest work I ever did in my life."
